FSP tutors claim discrimination

Policy protests prompted firing, say former workers

By W. Kevin Leung
City Editor

Two former tutors in UCLA's Freshman Summer Program have filed discrimination charges against the university, alleging they were fired for protesting certain policies of the program.

In the charges filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) and the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing, Derek Hong and Margaret Zamudio wrote they were "discriminated against in retaliation for protesting" the program's allegedly racist and sexist policies.

The university is in the process of responding to the two agencies, said Senior Administrative Analyst Linda Avila of the Staff Affirmative Action office. Avila's office is responsible for investigating discrimination charges against UCLA.

To protect the parties involved, Avila said she cannot comment on the case.

On Aug. 16, Academic Advancement Program (AAP) Director Adolfo Bermeo discharged the two English composition tutors from his staff, Hong and Zamudio said in separate interviews.

The advancement program provides tutoring and counseling services for affirmative action students. The freshman program, a division of the advancement program, works specifically with incoming students.

Bermeo infringed on their rights to freedom of speech, the tutors charged.

But the two students — who worked for AAP last year — were never hired for the summer program, according to Bermeo. He said although the summer program's Tutor Coordinator Kevin Dettmar recommended them for the jobs, he, not Dettmar, had final authority as program director as to who would be hired.

Bermeo did acknowledge that they were paid for several days' work already performed, even though they were not hired.

The director said he did not fire them, but rather decided not to hire them.

Although technically only the director has the right to hire employees, traditionally, the tutor coordinator conducts the interviews and makes the employment choices, Dettmar said.

Dettmar, who had since resigned his position due to Bermeo's decision, said 45 tutors were hired before Hong and Zamudio without consulting the director.

Discrimination cases of these kinds are difficult to assess, said Steve White, an official at the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing, in a telephone interview.

Although rejecting an applicant for protesting a company's possible discriminatory behavior is generally illegal, cases become less clearcut if the employee's action is disruptive to the operation of the company, White said.

Cases have to be considered individually, he noted.

A Note to Our Readers

Editor-in-Chief Nancy McCullough

On behalf of the nearly 100 staff members of the Daily Bruin, I would like to welcome all students, new and returning, to the 1988-1989 academic year. We sympathize with all of you who don't feel quite ready to renew your pursuits of higher knowledge after a long summer, but we hope that many of you share the same enthusiasm and optimism about the upcoming year that the Daily Bruin staff has. (Those of us, that is, who have recovered fully from the round-the-clock efforts of the last few weeks which produced the 208-page edition you are now reading!)

As the editor-in-chief, I take quite a bit of pride in letting you, our readers, know some of the changes made, the plans laid, and the goals set this summer to strengthen our ability to serve as your "window to the world" of UCLA and the greater community. Many of our changes are responses to suggestions from members of our community, because the Daily Bruin's strongest commitment is to serve the needs of our entire audience. I personally welcome your comments this year. While we may not be able to use every idea, we will certainly consider any suggestions made.

It seems as though it was just yesterday when all of us at the Daily Bruin were planning for our first summer issue. Many of us were new editors and business managers, and somewhat overwhelmed by the enormity of the whole newspaper operation. After a summer of new approaches (and some trial and error), we have targeted what our readers need and expect from their newspaper, and redesigned a total package aimed at meeting those needs and expectations:

■ First, as a response to the frequent requests for "more national news," we have instituted our "News Focus" section, which will regularly appear in the news section. It will contain a few of the top stories on the international, world, and national levels, pulled from wire reports. In the past, we have been told of the plight of many students, who rely solely upon the Daily Bruin for information, particularly those living on campus, who felt that they were in the dark about the world around them. For all of you, we hope this helps.

■ Given Los Angeles' status as a rich cultural, theatrical and performing arts mecca, we felt that it was time for our entertainment coverage to reflect more of that diversity. With the change of our section's name from "Review" to "Arts and Entertainment" comes a change in focus. In addition to our familiar movie and concert reviews, we will provide coverage of news relevant to the arts (such as the commentary you'll find on the Amnesty International festival in this issue), stories on the entertainment industry itself, and features which showcase the diverse talents of UCLA's own community.

■ This year, our news section will feature regular columns, written by professionals, in several fields that we think will be of use to our community. Some of you are probably already familiar with "Healthwatch," our regular feature on health and well-being for the campus community. Along similar lines will be a column written by members of the staff of Student Psychological Services which will include such pertinent subject matter as coping effectively with stress and procrastination. We are also considering a legal advice column as well as consumer guides to products and services used frequently by members of our community.

■ We have also done some revamping of our budget to make working for the Bruin a viable financial reality for more students. Now, our staff writers will earn about what they would at any other 15-hour per week job, so that more of you will find it possible to work as writers and attend school, without trying to hold down another job. We always are in need of new writing talent, and I invite anyone who may be interested in writing, artwork, or photography for the Bruin to attend our orientation on Oct. 5 at 6:30 p.m. in Rolfe 2131. To demonstrate our commitment to increasing the number of successful minorities in the field of journalism, we have designed a comprehensive exposure to all aspects of the newspaper for five recipients of our annual Daily Bruin Minority Scholarships. Information and applications will be forthcoming.

■ As you can see by our "Science in Action" section on page 28, we have made covering the sciences on campus high on our agenda for coverage this year. Because UCLA is one of the foremost research institutes in the country, we feel that our readers need to be kept informed of the technologies, medical treatments, and scientific discoveries going on right in our own backyard. Look for regular features on UCLA's scientific and research progress in our future issues.

I hope that those of you who are new to UCLA and the Daily Bruin have an understanding of our commitment to service to you as readers that our whole staff has undertaken. For those of you that have been around, we hope that our changes will be seen as improvement. For the whole staff, I pledge to maintain the standards of professionalism and journalistic excellence which make the Daily Bruin among the top-ranked college newspapers in the country.

A successful year to all!

A Freshman Summer Program instructor confronts FSP Director Adolfo Bermeo during a sit-in.

Instructors stage strike

By W. Kevin Leung
City Editor

Labor Day, when American workers are officially honored, is usually the last time for relaxation before summer ends and preparation for school begins. But only three days before the holiday weekend, a labor dispute in UCLA's Freshman Summer Program and Transfer Summer Program was not likely to rest.

When about 30 FSP and TSP English instructors went to pick up their paychecks on Aug. 31, they discovered that no checks were available because their hiring papers were never processed. Instead of a fun Labor Day weekend, several instructors feared the holiday could mean three more days of "tightening the belt" before the payroll office opened again on Tuesday.

On Sept. 1, the instructors staged a strike which lasted until the next day, when most instructors picked up 60 percent of their salary in "rush paychecks."

Payroll Section Manager Pixie Ogren explained that a rush paycheck is only 60 percent of a regular one because the rush does not allow tax deductions to be calculated. The remaining amount of the instructors' paychecks was paid in full on Sept. 6.

However, the labor dispute has not ended.

Although Adolfo Bermeo, director of FSP, TSP and the Academic Advancement Program, said he takes full responsibility for the mishap "because ultimately I am the director of the program." The exact place in the administration where the mistake occurred remains an open question. Meanwhile, the instructors alleged that the missing paychecks incident is only symptomatic of a larger problem in FSP and TSP.

After several administrators left the program and new personnel were hired earlier this year, FSP and TSP are "being run by people without the knowledge, experience and expertise necessary

UCLA student found dead

Body of Wolfe Kirson located after 10 days

By Richard Hopkins
Staff Writer

A UCLA undergraduate was found dead Sept. 22 in Sequoia National Park, after being missing for 10 days.

Wolfe Kirson, 20, apparently fell to his death on Sept. 12, the first day of what was to be a solo, five-day hike, according to park spokeswoman Jan Knox.

A search party found his body in a crevice about half a mile from Sawtooth Pass, nearly seven miles from his starting point at Mineral King, Knox said.

"We assume because of what the weather conditions were and that since it would have been after dark when he was there he probably lost the trail," Knox said.

The terrain where Kirson was hiking is "very steep and very rocky and has about an 11,000-foot peak," said Knox.

Kirson suffered a severe head injury and most likely died immediately, said Knox.

Kirson being congratulated by Senator Cranston for becoming 1986 runner-up national "Boy of the Year"

John Milani, a friend of Kirson since the eighth grade and a fellow Phi Kappa Psi brother, said Kirson "had asked a lot of people to come along with him (on the hike) but everyone had plans, so he went alone."

According to Milani, Kirson signed into the park on Sept. 12 and said he would be out in five days.

Kirson was an experienced hiker, who had gone on hiking trips once or twice a year, said Milani.

The UCLA student's disappearance was not noticed until he did not show up to a mandatory fraternity retreat in Palm Springs, Milani said.

"He never showed up. So Sunday, when I got home, I called his parents and left messages with both of them," said Milani.

Legionnaire's disease sparks local health alert

By Patrick McGee
Science/Academics Editor

The UCLA Medical Center found the origin of a Legionnaire's disease outbreak that has caused four deaths in the hospital since last fall, according to an official statement released by the medical center Wednesday.

The statement revealed that the outbreak has been traced to the hospital's hot water system and that a total of eight people were infected. It emphasized that steps have been taken to eliminate the bacteria and that there is no danger to patients or to the public.

The UCLA outbreak, coupled with six unrelated cases at a Westwood retirement home, has led the L.A. County Department of Health Services to issue a health alert. The department asked doctors to watch for pneumonia-like symptoms in patients who are elderly or whose immune systems are not functioning properly.

According to the Department of Health Services, the alert was issued July 29 as a routine precaution because there is no evidence that points to an ongoing problem or a threat to the public.

The disease, similar to pneumonia or a severe flu, is caused by the Legionella bacteria, so named because 29 people infected with the bacteria died after an American Legion convention in Philadelphia in 1976.

The eight patients who contracted the disease at the hospital were in extremely high risk categories because their immune systems had been weakened due to the severity of their illnesses, said Nancy Parris of the hospital's infection control department.

Ralliers call cosmetic tests on animals cruel

By Tina Anima and Valarie De La Garza
Assistant News Editors

More than 60 protesters circled in front of the Benetton store in Westwood Aug. 17, claiming the clothing chain unnecessarily kills animals for its cosmetic products.

Representatives of all ages from such activist groups as Last Chance for Animals and People for Reason in Science and Medicine (PRISM) walked in front of the store from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m.

According to the protesters' spokesman, Jack Carone, Benetton will be releasing a new line of personal care products that has recently been tested on animals to determine the level of harm inflicted. Carone claims that "these are not safety tests, and are not required by law."

One protester's placard read, "Benetton Butchers for Beauty."

According to a flier distributed by the Westwood Benetton, however, testing of products on animals is required by the Food and Drug Administration.

FDA Consumer Affairs Officer Gordon Scott said that "there are no FDA requirements for testing cosmetics on animals. But I would need to qualify that: the firm must demonstrate that the product is safe."

But Carone called the tests unwarranted, saying they merely determine what dosages kill animals. He said that in the tests, "animals are blinded, tortured and burned."

The protest was staged in front of the Westwood store because "they are relative newcomers (to the cosmetic industry, and) it's not too late for them to back up and take other options," Carone said, explaining that other companies do not perform such tests.

Colleen Smith, the manager of the clothing store, said she could not comment on the tests because she did not know all the necessary information.

Reg fees now up 4.4 percent

By Whitney Woodward
Staff Writer

The registration fee hike of 4.4 percent taking effect this academic year was news to Vincenzo Pandolfo, a first-year graduate student in business.

Pandolfo wasn't aware that reg fees had been increased by about $6O per quarter from last year, with a raise of over $200 for non-residents.

"But we already pay an extra fee for being from out-of-state," said Pandolfo, who is Italian. He has been searching for financial aid, and said that it has been "pretty tough."

The educational and registration fee increase, approved by the UC Regents last November, upped the UCLA undergraduate charge from $475 to $497 per quarter. Fees for graduate students are now $494 per quarter and non-resident tuition was raised from $4290 to $4506 per year — a 5 percent increase.

According to Larry Pierce, the UC Student Fee Advisory Committee supervisor, the revenue generated will go toward inflation costs. "Salaries go up, the cost of supplies go up," he said. Even with the fee increase, "there is no money to fund new programs at all."

Pierce estimated that the state of California picks up about 35 percent of a student's tuition bill — around $1 billion for UCLA per year. Many students would be surprised to find out that "absolutely none" of what they pay in registration and educational fees goes toward faculty and instruction costs.

"This is what you call a tuition-free institution. The money that you pay goes to student services and student government," said Pierce. About the closest that a student gets to paying for academics is the academic counseling services.

The primary difference between the registration fee and the educational fee that a student pays, Pierce said, is that the reg

Board of Control boycotts GE; products removed

By Whitney Woodward
Staff Writer

Students can't buy General Electric batteries and lightbulbs in the Country Store anymore — GE products have been taken off the shelves in a move to boycott the company.

During the first week of September, about $1,850 of General Electric stock was removed from ASUCLA student stores following a unanimous vote by the UCLA Board of Control to adopt sanctions against the company for violation of ASUCLA's Ethical and Social Responsibility (ESR) policy.

The ESR policy, mandated by BOC last October, states that "ASUCLA has a commitment to serve as a model of an institution of the utmost ethical and social integrity" not only in its own business practices, but in the companies with which it chooses to do business with as well.

Section III-A of the policy reads: "Upon finding that a company is acting in a socially or ethically irresponsible manner . . . the Board shall impose an appropriate sanction."

This policy was prompted by ASUCLA's protest last year against the Coca Cola Corporation's dealings in South Africa. BOC felt it necessary that guidelines be set by which a student could formally instigate similar actions.

Sanction petitions filed

The decision to boycott GE was based upon two petitions filed by UCLA students and a staff member last year which were deemed "meritorious" by the 1987-88 Board of Control.

Last May, BOC found GE's involvement with apartheid in South Africa and its alleged disrespect for the environment through the release of harmful toxins into the atmosphere and ground water, in violation of the ASUCLA ESR policy.

At an Aug. 31 meeting, crowded with boycott supporters and other interested observers, UCLA student petitioner Lani Spear introduced several guests who testified against GE. Although a GE representative was asked to attend the meeting, he did not choose to do so.

"I advised (the representative)

BOC policy serves as watchdog for ethics

By W. Kevin Leung

"Let Your Conscience Be Our Guide."

The above sentence appears on the cover of a pamphlet that explains the ASUCLA Board of Control's Ethical and Social Responsibility (ESR) policy.

The ESR policy, adopted by BOC last October, is a mechanism through which UCLA community members ensure ASUCLA is dealing with companies that "function in an ethical and socially responsible manner."

Upon finding that a company is acting irresponsibly, a person may file a petition with supporting documents — such as newspaper articles — explaining the company's alleged irresponsible practices. Petitions are available at ASUCLA Executive Director Jason Reed's office in 332 Kerckhoff Hall.

According to the policy, specific practices which warrant sanctions include irresponsible workplace ethics, disrespect for the environment and involvement with racially segregated South Africa.

After the company in question is contacted, it is given [illegible] to respond. If the [illegible] then would have a negligible impact on ASUCLA, the board receivers — consisting of the executive director, BOC's chair and vice chair — may then take action without the full board's consultation.

The matter may be referred to the full board if the sanction's potential impact is unclear or if the board receivers cannot unanimously agree on the petition's claim.

Petitions may also be returned to the petitioners if the information is insufficient.

The board receivers or the board may levy one of five sanction options:

- Discontinuance of business relations with the company.
- A written notice of concern, including BOC's findings and the ESR policy, to the company to request that it change its irresponsible practice within a certain time period. A company that fails to change may be subject to the first sanction option.
- Posting of highly visible signs to educate the public about the behavior of the company.
- An educational campaign including advertisements in the Daily Bruin.
- Any combination of the above or any other action the board may determine is appropriate.

BOC discusses condom brochures

By Whitney Woodward
Staff Writer

BOC

Following a three-and-a-half hour testimony and discussion that resulted in sanctions against General Electric at the Aug. 31 ASUCLA Board of Control meeting, members turned to other items on the agenda.

Items approved by the BOC committee included:

- A call for a "special meeting" to discuss a motion that ASUCLA print 25,000 copies of a condom use brochure to be made available at each of the existing condom vending machine locations.

The special meeting was deemed necessary by the board because of the explicit nature of the brochure. BOC Faculty Representative Gary Richardson, a School of Public Health professor, wanted to gain the approval of board members before the Sept. 30 BOC meeting in order to have the brochures out by the start of the school year. The brochures were later approved at that meeting.

- A motion introduced by Graduate Representative Lionel Mandy that the credit card applications currently included in ASUCLA merchandise bags be replaced by the VISA card offered by a company called "Working Assets" that does not invest its funds in companies doing business in South Africa.
- A motion proposed by Food Service Director Rich Wheeler and North Campus Division Manager Kathy Harry that BOC approve the allocation of $540,000 in funding for alteration to the north campus dining facility to relieve overcrowding.
- A motion authorizing the expenditure of up to $30,000 for the purchase of an automated sales and inventory control system for the ASUCLA computer store.

Phone enrollment set to end lines, frustration

By Michael Lawrence, Contributor

For many Reg Week veterans, enrolling by phone seems too good to be true. No endless waiting in Ackerman Union on stiff metal chairs? No crowding around the posted class listings? No KLA crackling in your ears?

But tele-registration is now a reality. By winter quarter, the UCLA Registrar's Office plans to implement a new system that will allow undergraduates to enroll in their classes via touchtone telephones.

Under the new system, students will no longer need to mail their schedules to the Registrar's Office. Instead, they will directly access UCLA's enrollment computer by calling a 213 area code number.

Conceived by Associate Director Anita Cotter, the process is as easy as 1-2-3.

A recorded human voice will guide users through the process. By punching telephone buttons to enter course identification numbers, students can add or drop classes, sign up on waiting lists or change the grading basis of classes.

Within 10 days of a new quarter, the students will receive printed copies of their schedules.

Telephone enrollment will reduce the registrar's workload, said Enrollment Supervisor Dan Mihaljevich, because computers will perform tasks formerly requiring human operators.

The Daily Bruin was unable to contact Cotter, who was on vacation, for comments at press time.

There may be initial problems as the bugs are worked out of the new system, but in the long run it should be more equitable for everyone, Mihaljevich said.

"Last year a lot of people got locked out of general education classes," said Mihaljevich, explaining that with the current system, students must have class petitions postmarked by the first possible mailing date in order to compete for enrollment. On the first day, the Registrar's Office receives approximately 8,000 to 10,000 petitions, which are then randomly processed after petitions for priority enrollment, he said.

Students who send in their petitions the second day or later have little chance of enrolling in classes of their choice, Mihaljevich said.

Following the new procedure, the Registrar's Office will instead assign each student two appointment times or "passes."

Students will be allowed to enroll in only 10 units the first pass; they then must call a second time at a later date to add remaining classes. Mihaljevich said 10 units were chosen in case a student had a five-unit class or wanted to add a one-unit lab.

Once students with priority enrollment are given their classes, appointment times will be "based on units," Mihaljevich said. Graduating seniors with 160 units and above will receive the earliest calling times, followed in descending order by new and re-entering students, the remaining seniors, juniors, sophomores and continuing freshmen. Within these categories, calling times will be assigned randomly by computer.

'Incredible responses'

Brigham Young University (BYU), the first American school to use telephone enrollment, borrowed the idea from computer-telephone banking. BYU's Assistant Registrar Wayne Childs said his school is pleased with its five-year-old system. "We've had incredible responses from our students," he added.

New limits on priority enrollment

"If you need a popular class, you can forget it," Enrollment Supervisor Dan Mihaljevich said of students without priority enrollment who wait until the second permissible day to send in their study list requests.

But under a soon to be implemented tele-registration system, the enrollment process at UCLA will be "more equitable" for all students, Mihaljevich said.

In the past, students with priority enrollment could submit their study lists a day before other students. Their full lists were then processed ahead of other requests. Students with priority enrollment are approved by the chancellor's office on the basis of need, service and merit, he said.

see chart at right

Under the new registration system, approximately 4000 students with priority enrollment will still send in class requests before they receive their assigned calling times. However, they will be limited to registering for 10 units — the same number of units non-priority students are allowed to enroll in during their first assigned calling time.

"The new system allows us to even it out a little bit, to limit the number of units at a 'pass' (an appointed time)," Mihaljevich said.

According to a study done after spring quarter last year, 18 percent of UCLA undergraduates received priority enrollment and were taking 30 percent of the space in general education requirement classes, Mihaljevich said.

Although students with priority will be able to change their classes during their first pass, they will not be allowed to add more than 10 units until the second pass.

20 YEARS Charles Young

Chancellor Young today...

Five years after he became chancellor, Charles Young told a Los Angeles Times reporter that he did not think he would still be chancellor in 10 years. "Fifteen years is a long time to be chancellor," he said.

But somewhere along the line Young changed his mind. For this year Young, who became the youngest chancellor in UC history when he was chosen at age 36 in 1968 to succeed Franklin D. Murphy, marks his twentieth year in office.

During that time much has changed at UCLA. The university's reputation has soared to where UCLA is now considered to be in the same rank as Harvard, Yale and Stanford.

And deserved or not, much of the credit or blame for what happens at UCLA is attributed to Chancellor Young.

Beginning Oct. 24 the Bruin will run a series that will take a look at some of the changes UCLA has undergone over the last two decades and Young's role in those changes. Look for the stories each Monday.

The agony, ecstasy of finding parking at UCLA

By David Mori
Staff Writer

For some students, waiting in a long and slow-moving line to pick up parking permits may seem like an unending horror story, but for others, the real horror is not receiving a permit at all.

"They need more parking," said second year UCLA student Phil Lawrence, who received a parking permit after having applied for one twice before. He describes campus parking as "OK," but "not that great."

Agreeing with Lawrence, senior Veronica Verzosa said that UCLA needs more parking. Having applied four times before, this year is the first time she was able to get a permit.

Unlike the first two, freshman Jeff Young was a bit more fortunate. "I'm just glad to get one," he said.

Though UCLA has approximately 18,291 parking spaces, including spaces at the off-campus lot, patient and meter parking, students, such as the ones above, must still compete for only a handful of parking permits.

Last fall quarter, for instance, while 12,869 students applied for an on-campus parking permit, only 6,369 were approved, said Charles Cuenod, assistant manager of Campus Parking Services.

Though figures for this fall quarter are not yet available, Cuenod estimates the number of students receiving permits would remain about the same as last year, but he has no guess as to the number of people who applied for permits for this fall.

To alleviate some campus parking problems, more specifically, a shortage of parking spaces, changes are constantly being made, according to Cuenod. The university is concentrating on constructing more parking structures and transforming parking lots into structures.

Parking Lot 36, for instance, containing 1,168 spaces, is currently being rebuilt into a parking structure, which will accommodate 2,900 automobiles.

Although such a construction project creates a short-term parking shortage, Campus Parking Service has increased parking space at the Veterans Administration and transformed aisles in Structure 14 into parking spaces to alleviate the problem. The result is a single lane, instead of two, down the middle of each isle on levels 3, 4 and parts of 2.

But until there are more parking spaces, students will continue to compete for parking.

Parking permits, which may be purchased on a quarterly or a yearly basis, are allotted to students based on their responses in the UCLA Student Parking Request form.

Permits are awarded on the basis of a point system and not by lottery. This system rates students according to a variety of factors, including lot choice, commuting distance, dependence, on- or off-campus employment and class standing.

Cuenod admitted that a point system does invite corruption. The number of students who lie on their application is small, and "internal auditors" check "to see if information is correct."

The internal auditors believe a random check of fifty applications is a statistically valid representation of the nearly 12,000 students who apply, according to Cuenod. "It's time consuming to audit just the fifty," he said.

If auditors do not catch those who lie on their parking request, there are other ways to be caught. For example, some people are found by the police to be using illegal parking permits.

According to Campus Parking Services, if one is caught lying on the Student Parking Request, they could be subject to several penalties, including revocation of permit for up to four years, record of the offense in the office of the Dean of Students and additional action at the Dean's discretion.

There are some people, however, who do not have to apply for parking permits and receive guaranteed parking instead. Faculty and staff are guaranteed a parking space "as a condition of employment," Cuenod said.

Disabled persons are given parking permits depending on their disability and how close they need to be to the campus.

Also, graduate students who are employed "49 percent of the time (roughly 20 hours) or greater" may receive parking permits, Cuenod said. "Part-time, non-undergraduate employees qualify as staff."

Graduate students who are considered staff include teaching assistants, resident assistants and other positions that would qualify them as UCLA staff.

Undergraduates who work 20 hours or more each week do not qualify as staff and must apply for a parking permit, Cuenod said. "The system" of giving working undergraduates parking permits "would tend to favor those who work on campus. There's no reason to favor them."

Contrary to popular belief, according to Cuenod, athletes receive no guaranteed or priority parking and must apply through the regular process. In addition, such a privilege is not granted through the athletic department, said Chuck Parish, assistant athletic director for Intercollegiate Athletic department.

At least 5 percent of the total number of parking spaces is left available for visitors, Cuenod said. Students may not occupy these spaces, and those who request visiting passes are asked their nature of business at UCLA.

Priority consideration is given to students who participate in UCLA's carpool program. However, those who are caught lying on their applications will have to relinquish their standing on the waiting list, according to Cuenod.

Commuting options aid UCLA's carless

By David Mori
Staff Writer

For students who applied for parking permits and could not get one, do not despair. There are still many ways for students to get to UCLA.

Options include UCLA's vanpool and carpool services and a new UCLA/Westwood commuter line, which is scheduled to begin operation this January, according to Kathleen Griessel, transportation programs coordinator for the Commuter Assistance-Ridesharing Office.

Persons allowed to participate in these riding options include UCLA students, faculty, staff and Westwood Village employees. Priority options, however, are granted to those directly affiliated with the university, according to Griessel.

UCLA is required to offer these alternatives because of a regulation approved by the South Coast Air Quality Management District, which states that employers who have more than 100 employees must provide them with ridesharing services. This regulation went into effect Jan. 1, 1988.

But students without parking permits, intent on reaching UCLA by car might consider the free parking available at the Wilshire Boulevard Veterans Administration (VA) lot until 5 p.m. "You have to get there early," Griessel warned.

For those who ride motorcycles, mopeds and bicycles, parking is free at designated locations around campus. A map detailing these places

USAC budget cuts debated

By Tina Anima
Politics Editor

Students may enjoy fewer programs from student interest groups and some Undergraduate Students Association commissions due to recent budget allocations, according to council members and SIG leaders.

"Reduced budget means reduced programming," Cultural Affairs Commissioner Ken Wada said.

As an example of reduced programming, Campus Events Commissioner Greg Ambrose said students may see fewer films, speakers and concerts from his commission.

At its Aug. 23 meeting, USAC approved its budget for the fiscal year — a budget that included increases for the American Indian Students Association (52 percent), the Interfraternity Council (72 percent) and Panhellenic Council (67 percent), as compared to last year.

The same budget decreased the Black Student Alliance's funds by 46 percent, and MEChA, UCLA's Latino student organization, received a 30-percent cut. The Gay and Lesbian Association, Asian Pacific Coalition and Jewish Student Union also received cuts, of 30, 22 and 3 percent.

Not only were SIGs affected, but four USAC commissions also received deductions. Academic Affairs' budget shrunk by 47 percent, and Campus Events decreased by 29 percent. The Cultural Affairs and Community Service commissions also received cuts of 35 and 14 percent, respectively.

'Some coincidence?'

"Is it some coincidence that all of the progressive groups and commissions got their budgets cut? Of course not," Campus Events Commissioner Greg Ambrose said.

Ambrose explained that the more "progressive" or Third World-supported groups included BSA, MEChA and the four USAC commissions receiving budget cuts.

Community Service Commissioner John Sarvey took the same position at the Aug. 23 council meeting, accusing the subcommittee of "taking the political spoils system to its extreme."

"I don't think that's necessarily true. I think the council has been very open-minded," IFC Second Vice President Bruce Cowan said. "Maybe a spoils system existed in the past."

Harrington also denounced Sarvey's statement, saying, "I don't think that's true at all. Groups like ISA (the International Students Association) did not support me (in the spring election) and got increases."

ISA received a 130-percent increase of $3371.

Cowan said the fraternity council has not drawn up its budget, but he estimated that his group will use the $8,564 allocation to help fund programs such as Alcohol Awareness Week.

"We certainly could have used more money. In the past, we weren't given what we should have been," Cowan said.

Last year, IFC was allocated $4,990. In 1986, the group received $3,444, according to Finance Committee Chair Mark Arvizu.

MEChA Administrative Coordinator Lupe Duran believes this year's allocations were "a political move." Last year, MEChA received $11,422 and in 1986 was allocated $11,897. The Chicano-Latino organization's budget shrunk to $8,016 this year.

"The major harm has been done already," Duran said, adding that she would not be surprised if similar insensitivities to minority groups continue to occur.

IFC requested over $60,000 for the fiscal year, while MEChA requested over $70,000.

TenPercent editors dispute controversial June editorial

By Valarie De La Garza and Tina Anima
Assistant News Editors

Current TenPercent editor-in-chief Marcie Kaye "fabricated" her testimony during the Aug. 30 Undergraduate Students Association Council meeting, charged a former associate editor who Kaye claims was responsible for a controversial editorial in the gay and lesbian newsmagazine.

"That's completely fabricated," Doug Walters told the Bruin in response to Kaye's assertion that Walters worked alone in printing the editorial which listed the home addresses and phone numbers of eight then members of USAC.

Walters said most of the TenPercent editors approved the unsigned editorial that prompted USAC to "suggest" the magazine print an explanation of the June editorial (Summer Bruin, Sept. 1).

During the council meeting, Kaye said Walters, who was not present, worked independently and withheld his editorial until minutes before the paper was to be printed.

Walters said the editorial was actually written one week before it was printed.

Officials make UCLA quake-ready

By Marlene Casillas, Contributor

UCLA is a city within a city. Each day about 55,000 people share 411 acres of campus. Every day, each person encounters a sea of unidentifiable faces.

Strangers pass on walkways, assemble in classrooms and neighbor in residence halls. Most never interact. But in an earthquake, individual lives may depend on how well this multitude of strangers works together.

Imagine: the earthquake hits.

In an auditorium, 250 students stampede for the doorway and needlessly trample and injure each other.

In a restroom, two strangers are trapped and one is severely bleeding. The other administers first aid and saves his life.

Nobody knows where they will be when the earthquake occurs — but everybody should know how to react if a quake hits the campus. The more people are aware, the fewer injuries and deaths will occur, said campus disaster experts.

"Our safety is tied up with everyone else's reaction," said Roni Gordon, disaster preparedness coordinator at the Office of Research and Occupational Safety. But the size of the UCLA population makes it difficult to teach everyone the disaster-response plan, said Gordon.

The core of the disaster-response plan is a network of people trained to work in an organized effort, Gordon said.

All campus buildings have an emergency coordinator and safety team, who are in the buildings regularly, plus alternates. At least one team member is responsible for each floor.

Coordinators are trained to assess structural damage, check utilities, conduct search and rescue and do CPR, said

Staying safe at UCLA:

Officials work to clean campus of crime

Rape.

The word evokes images and emotions that are not easily ignored. For UCLA students, in particular, the word may bring to mind two dates — Oct. 5, 1987 and June 10, 1988. Both dates mark rapes that occurred on campus and will not be forgotten by the two victims.

The warnings and publicity that have followed each of these incidents are not going unnoticed, according to Crime Prevention Officer Gene Allen, who claims "people are becoming more and more aware of their surroundings."

In fact, Allen is convinced that "UCLA is probably one of the safest campuses across the country . . . not nearly as unsafe as, say, Michigan State or USC, where it is virtually impossible to walk the campus alone."

Allen commented that UCLA's success in preventing crime is due greatly to the excellent work of the UC Police Department. Police vehicles patrol the campus and Westwood areas 24 hours a day with more emphasis placed in the evening hours. Recent recruiting difficulties and the fact that UCPD answers calls from all of the surrounding Westwood area have not affected UCPD's ability to combat crime, said Allen.

Tina Oakland, director of the Women's Resource Center, agreed that UCLA is probably among the safest campuses in the nation but discouraged over-confident thinking because crime statistics existing outside of the university still affect the campus population.

The Women's Resource Center provides a variety of programs targeted to UCLA students who have been raped or assaulted as well as to those students wishing to take preventive measures. The rape prevention and self-defense workshops deal with rape misconceptions, safety suggestions, and self-defense techniques.

According to Oakland, these workshops have been "very well attended . . . we don't just encourage self-defense, we encourage women not to think of themselves as vulnerable . . . but to feel they can protect themselves if they need to."

Rape is an ever-present possibility, yet it is admittedly not as frequent on the UCLA campus as are robberies and aggravated assaults. "Aggravated assault (also called battery) is a term more commonly used by the FBI to describe a violent incident where two people are involved in an unprovoked fight," said Allen.

According to Allen, there were 20 aggravated assaults in 1987 — the majority involving UCLA students. In that same year, 20 robberies related to the UCLA community also occurred on and off campus.

While the figures do not reflect property burglary, a non-violent crime, nor the many cases that go unreported, Allen stressed the need for awareness. He indicated that crime is not selective and could strike anyone who is unprepared or unaware of his or her surroundings.

"I don't think a 20- or 21-year-old should have to be told to be careful nowadays. It's simply common sense. There are a lot of dangers out there, and if you don't care enough about yourself to take all the precautions necessary, sooner or later you're going to learn the hard way," said Paul Scalise, a sophomore living in Rieber Hall who was almost assaulted himself.

"I really don't think safety measures on campus could be improved since it's up to the individual, but I think if there could be a 24-hour Community Service Officer (CSO) service during midterms and finals there would be a difference." Both Allen and Oakland agreed that while CSO service could operate on a 24-hour basis during finals week, rape and assault are still possibilities.

Oakland added, "Just because someone is accompanied by another person does not mean there will not be any danger."

"If you really need to study late, plan ahead and stay home . . . and if you need to go to the library, schedule yourself or have someone pick you up," emphasized Allen.

Making apartment life saner: the Housing Office's advice

By Chase Roberts, Contributor

Last year UCLA student John Silberman went through the three worst quarters of his life. But his problems weren't in the classroom; they were at his apartment with his roommate.

When finals week came around, Silberman could neither study nor sleep.

Weeknights were party nights for his roommate. The noise would go on half the night.

Then there were the bills.

"He would never own up to the long distance calls on the phone bills," said Silberman. Even when confronted by the proof, he would refuse to pay, he added.

Silberman's situation is typical of problems faced by many UCLA students forced by economics to share their apartment with strangers, said professional roommate finders and experts at UCLA's Community Housing Office.

But it does not have to be this way, they added.

Screening a potential roommate is the first and most important step, said Joy Rippeth, president of Roommate Finders Inc., a roommate matching service.

Get potential roommates out of the house, she said. Their personality and preferences will emerge in a more social setting. Whatever you learn in this casual conversation will help you decide if you want to live with this person or not, Rippeth said.

Explain the house rules, especially those concerned with cleaning, noise, parties, guests and bills. If they protest, she said, take note.

Everybody should help clean, and whoever does not should pay the person who does the most work, Rippeth said. Discuss tolerable noise levels and when or if parties are allowable. Guests that stay for a long period of time cost money. Make it clear that if one stays over a lot, the other roommates must be compensated, she said.

Bills are commonly the biggest problem between roommates, Rippeth noted.

Each roommate should have a utility under his name, Rippeth suggested, so everybody is responsible for bills and will share in the collection.

Most importantly, everyone should get their own phone number, use their own phone and pay for their own phone bill since, as Silberman discovered, phone bills are the most common bone of contention.

Roommate contracts are a good way to make sure rules are clear, said Michel McLaughlin, assistant director of the Community Housing Office. The contract will explain the "duties and responsibilities roommates agree to owe each other," he said. The housing office has sample contracts which are available free to all UCLA community members.

The contract explains important rules such as security deposits, rents, utility bills and how they are to be paid. It also covers use of personal property.

It is important to get everything in writing for legal purposes. If one roommate skips out on their rent, the remaining roommates would have to cover it, McLaughlin said, adding that in order to recover their money the roommates will need this legal document to prove in court that an agreement was made, McLaughlin said.

The Community Housing Office also provides information on renters' rights and offers a rental agreement that both tenants and landlords can use to explain what is expected of each other.

Even though Silberman had found his roommate through the housing office, he said he had failed to take advantage of these services. So this year, Silberman was back to find a new roommate.

Dorm roommate conflict common but solvable

By David Mori
Staff Writer

"It was awful," a former Hedrick Hall resident said when asked to describe her relationship with her roommate from last year.

The student said her relationship was "OK" at first, but problems arose when her roommate "stopped showering and stopped being a human being."

"It was gross. She smelled. She would sleep in her clothes and wear them the next day," she said.

Unable to tolerate her roommate any longer, the wronged woman moved into another room. "Living with my new roommate was like heaven," she concluded.

As this experience illustrates, roommate problems tend to be "behavioral," said Jack Gibbons, assistant director of UCLA's Office of Residential Life.

Other typical "behavioral" conflicts include stereo loudness, room cleanliness and bedtimes.

'With such dense living arrangements . . . problems will be more difficult to resolve.'

—Jack Gibbons, on the new three-person dorm rooms.

But if two people show little or no compatibility, how do they originally end up living together and can such a situation be resolved?

Frank Trucba, assistant director of Sproul Hall, said computers match students according to their answers on the UCLA on-campus housing assignment form.

At some campuses such as UC San Diego and UC Irvine, though, roommates are matched manually.

Pat Dougherty, student dean at UCSD's Muir College, said the university will use computers to match roommates beginning next year.

Currently, UCSD students are manually matched, with smoking as a priority consideration because it is a "personal" issue for some. Other considerations include bedtimes, room cleanliness, acceptance of alcohol and a common section.

Similarly, UCI manually chooses roommates with smoking as a priority consideration in the selection process, according to Marge McDowell, administrative assistant for Mesa Court Housing.

Other responses considered in the selection process include hall choice and study and sleeping habits. "Of course, they never agree on every one. But they do agree on quite a few of them," McDowell said.

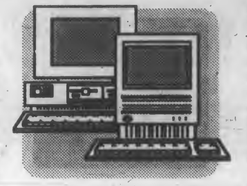
Campus computer labs cater to student needs

By Lisa Motoyama
Contributor



Using a computer "saves a lot of time" and it's "definitely very useful," said sophomore Angela Gomez while typing her final paper in the Humanities Computing Lab.

Realizing the importance of computing in education, UCLA makes computers available to all students, according to officials from various on-campus computer centers.

The Microcomputing Information Center, the Social Sciences Computing Lab and the Humanities Computing Lab together provide the entire university community access to personal computers.

The Microcomputuer Information Center (MIC), located at 2035 Anderson Graduate School of Management, is open to all UCLA faculty, staff and students.

There is no cost to use its dot matrix printer and 10 Macintosh SE computers. However, the center provides no assistance or technical support, said Don Worth, manager of the Microcomputer Support Office.

The center does provide a selection of 600 software packages, free "public domain" software and advice for those contemplating the purchase of a computer. Anyone can make copies of the free software compiled on compact disc by the Boston Computer Society and the Berkeley Mac User's Group, Worth said.

MIC, however, does not cater specifically to students. In fact, students comprise only 10 percent of their users. The remaining 90 percent are staff and faculty.

Academic computer users are particularly catered to in the Social Sciences Computing Labs and the Humanities Computing Lab.

The Social Sciences Computing Labs, found in 2165 Bunche Hall and 2434 Franz Hall, are free to all undergraduate and graduate students in the social sciences.

Social science students can make use of statistical analysis packages, math analysis, word processing and access to UCLA's main social sciences computing network.

The network is "one way of having computers communicate with each other," said Barry Gerber, administrative director of Social Sciences Computing. It allows users to access laser printers and plotters as well as international computer networks, he added.

Of the 8000 social science students on campus, 3000 are registered users of the facility, Gerber said. Because of the high volume of computer use, the lab is unable to devote much computer time to word processing, Gerber added.

Those students who are not social science majors can use the Humanities Computing Lab. Any UCLA student, faculty or staff member can use the lab but humanities students have priority. The lab, located in the Powell Library stacks, requires a $5 user fee per quarter.

The fee pays for unlimited use of the computers and unlimited use of six on-line dot matrix printers. A lab monitor is available to assist students in using the 20 Macintosh SEs and 20 IBM PC IIs. The lab carries Macwrite for the Macintosh computers and Microsoft Word word processing programs for both the Macintoshes and the IBMs. Users need only supply their own blank disks. The lab is open during the regular stack hours of Powell Library.

The Humanities Computing Office is also scheduled to open a new lab in Haines Hall during the beginning of fall quarter.

Free computer accounts available to students, faculty

By Kelly Barnes
Contributor

Faculty and students beware: there's no excuse to remain in the dark when it comes to computing at UCLA.

Students have had access to free computer accounts for several years, but the Office of Academic Computing is now inviting faculty members to open an account. The account would allow access to ORION, UCLA's library on-line card catalog; and Ben, a computer mail network that reaches over 25,000 institutions worldwide with the speed of a phone call.

"OAC decided to offer faculty accounts in order to ease communication between colleagues around the world," said Bonnie Aten, user services/user relations manager.

The IBM 3090 mainframe system enables users to link to supercomputers nationally and worldwide, with programs from word processing to nuclear physics.

Student accounts include ORION and Ben, but they can also reach a network of software capable of sophisticated graphics, statistical analysis, word processing, and large data set analysis for research.

For graduate students, one program can even format a paper according to UCLA's thesis and dissertation standards. Anything the user generates may be printed on a laser printer, which is also free, in many different styles of type and formats.

Student accounts must be used for educational activities, and students who have access to the system through a class they are enrolled in cannot use the accounts. Similarly, the accounts are not available to faculty members who already have access to the mainframe system through their department, Aten said.

"OAC encourages independent study for non-majors, such as learning a computer language and writing original programs," said Aten. OAC will also offer support to a faculty member who wishes to use the mainframe system for teaching a class.

All free accounts are given a fixed number of "resource units." These units are decreased for logging on, printing and running programs. If the resource units are exhausted, more may be applied for at OAC.

Twenty-four hour access to terminals is available in the Math Sciences building. Many department computers on campus also have access to the system.

"A student can even access the system from a personal computer in their dorm room through a modem," said Aten. In fact, any personal computer, once equipped with a modem, can have 24-hour access to the system.

Personal passwords to access anything that is saved make the accounts secure. Users may also limit access to their account by allowing someone to only read documents, as opposed to changing or deleting them.

No matter what your computing needs are, the Office of Academic Computing has something for you. Those not familiar with the IBM 3090 mainframe system can take introductory classes at the beginning of each quarter. Assistance is available throughout the year by phone, walk-in appointments and by questions sent to the OAC through computer mail.

New accounts can be opened with a student ID and reg card in person or by phone at the OAC office in 4302 Math Sciences, 825-7548.

Sailing the waters of Marina Del Rey

Aquatic Center features classes in windsurfing, catamaraning

By Marlene Casillas, Contributor

A prescription for students stressed by the fast-paced quarter system is only 15 minutes from campus, said UCLA recreation personnel.

The UCLA Aquatic Center in Marina Del Rey offers students, staff and faculty a refreshing change of environment, said Eric Bonniot, facilities manager. People with no nautical experience, some aquatic skills or expert sailing knowledge can find services to suit them.

The center offers classes in windsurfing, catamaraning, sailing, canoeing and kayaking at beginning, intermediate and advanced levels.

"It's only a few miles from UCLA," said Bonniot, "but it takes you really far away from campus."

During informal sailing, catamarans whisk through the Marina. Advanced sailors and their guests head out for an ocean excursion.

Equipment check-out privileges highlight the program. Students enrolled in a class can check-out boats, catamarans and windsurfers for free on Tuesdays, Saturdays and Sundays from 1 p.m. until dusk. Students may also bring guests.

Some people not enrolled in the program may also qualify for check-out privileges. People who have completed classes at the center, or who pass a required test can pay $30 per quarter for windsurfers, or $40 for boats.

A daily rate of $5 per hour is also offered for sailors who want occasional access to the facilities.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

UCLA sailboard instructors enjoy an afternoon in Marina Del Rey. UCLA students may enroll in a sailing class or take advantage of the facilities for a daily fee.

The instructional program allows participants an opportunity for growth and development of skills. Most students who start in a beginning class continue with higher-level instruction, said Bonniot.

In addition, as students complete higher-level courses, they can check out more advanced equipment. Flying Juniors, the advanced boats, are lighter, faster, and hold more people than beginner boats.

The highest privilege in the program is the "outside pass," Bonniot said. Students must complete the advanced course and pass a difficult written test to earn an outside pass. Outside privileges allow mariners to take boats and guests outside of the marina for sailing excursions.

Many student strive to earn a pass.

"I didn't know a thing about sailing when I started here. But I loved it so much I made it my goal to earn an outside pass," said Henry Stern, an aerospace engineering major who just earned the pass this summer.

"My next goal is to be an instructor."

A large number of students achieve expert level skills that lead to jobs and athletic competition, said Bonniot. Some aquatic center graduates become instructors. People who have completed the sailing and certification courses through the UCLA program comprise 70 to 80 percent of the instructors.

Some program graduates have started racing. Currently, there are six or seven UCLA people actively racing in the Marina, said Bonniot. Racers in the Marina often look for crew members at the center. Even more have joined the UCLA sailing club, which competes intercollegiately.

"This way people can enjoy the sport without all the expenses," said Bonniot.

"You don't have to be born into a yacht family to sail," he said.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Chris Howard, a recreation class teacher, performs one of windsurfing's trickier maneuvers.

Canoeing or kayaking is offered for students interested in other aquatic sports. Currently, the classes are taught in another area of the Marina.

However, the classes and equipment will be moved to the center by winter 1989, Bonniot said. The move will allow check-out privileges for the canoeist and kayaker.

Special river trips highlight the program. Day and weekend trips are often planned for students to practice their skills in a fun setting. Special sailing excursions and barbecues are also planned within the sailing and windsurfing programs, said Bonniot.

"The aquatic center is really a great place to spend time," said Bonniot.

"I started in the beginner class here years ago. Now, it's my full-time job."

Editor's note: The following is a compilation of the summer's newsmakers.

■ June 10 — A 22-year-old female student was raped near the walkway between Ackerman Union and the Engineering I building at approximately 2:30 a.m., according to UCPD Lt. Jim Kuehn. The suspect pretended he had a gun in his coat pocket and forced the victim into the bushes next to the walkway, Kuehn said, adding that no one witnessed the rape. Community Service Officer (CSO) escorts had ended work that morning at 1 a.m.

(Summer Bruin, June 27)

■ June 17 — The word, "spirit" captured the feeling surrounding the California Special Olympics opening ceremony held in UCLA's Drake Stadium. Children and adults, ages eight and up, competed in sporting events such as soccer, basketball, bowling and aquatics. More than 2500 Special Olympics athletes from 66 Special Olympic area programs in California marched in the ceremony, accompanied by movie and television personalities, professional athletes and recording artists.

The committee voted to give UC a $75 million general cut in its $1.9 billion state budget. It also cut several specific UC and CSU programs for total cuts of $88 million for UC and $66 million for CSU.
(Summer Bruin, June 27)

■ June 26 — Singing UCLA's fight song along Santa Monica Boulevard, members of two UCLA student organizations led the 1988 Los Angeles Gay and Lesbian Pride Parade in West Hollywood. Lambda Delta Lambda and Delta Lambda Phi, UCLA's lesbian sorority and gay fraternity respectively, were grand marshals of the afternoon parade.

The two groups made headlines when they formed earlier this year. Lambda Delta Lambda, officially recognized by the university in February, was the first lesbian sorority in the nation. Delta Lambda Phi was the only gay fraternity at the time of its recognition in March.
(Summer Bruin, June 30)

■ June 30 — Retired industrialist Norton Simon decided more than a year ago to drop plans to donate his valuable art collection to UCLA, but the decision was not made public. Simon's offer was withdrawn June 3, 1987, four months after a UCLA press conference announced the acquisition of the collection, worth at least $750 million. Walter Timoshuk, Norton Simon Art Foundation vice president, issued a brief statement. "There were problems of which the university is well aware of in both substance of the negotiations and in the manner of which UCLA conducted them . . ."

Two men were arrested and charged for the assault.

The policy prohibited possession and use of of any alcoholic beverages in the four undergraduate residence halls. Mira Hershey Hall, the graduate students' hall was not covered by the policy. Several alcohol-related discipline problems last summer led to the "dry dorms" policy, staff members said.

(Summer Bruin, July 18)

■ July 13 — A man visiting UCLA died after falling from Parking Structure 9, according to UCPD. Ranier Gattinger's body was found lying on the ground floor of the parking structure at approximately 12:50 p.m., said UCPD Lt. Jim Kuehn. Gattinger, an Austrian, was on campus visiting a girlfriend who is a UCLA student, according to Kuehn. Police do not know if Gattinger was pushed, accidentally fell, or committed suicide from the northwest corner of the structure.
(Summer Bruin, July 18)

■ July 15 — Out-of-state students will have to pay an additional 10 percent to attend the University of California, the UC Regents decided at their UCLA meeting. The increase will affect approximately 12,000 of the university's more than 140,000 students. With the increase in non-resident tuition, the Regents expect to raise about $4 million in 1988-89 — and $6 million a year thereafter — to help offset lower-than-expected state funding. For out-of-state students, tuition will rise from $1,502 to $1,652 per quarter beginning winter 1989 at all quarter-system UC campuses. The increase raises non-resident tuition to $4,806 for 1988-89 and to $4,956 thereafter. (Summer Bruin, July 21)

■ July 14 — New undergraduate admission guidelines for UC campuses where enrollment demand exceeds available space were presented at a UC Regents meeting. The guidelines, effective with applications for fall 1990 enrollment at the eight general campuses, come two months after the Regents adopted a new undergraduate admissions policy as part of an effort to clarify the admissions process in light of increased enrollment. (Summer Bruin, July 25)

■ August 4 — Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis delivered a brief speech in UCLA's Royce Hall that primarily focused on environmental policies. In a question and answer period afterward, he discussed the issues of homelessness and the war in Central America.

USAC Summer Roundup GSA

Compiled by Tina Anima
Politics Editor

Editor's note: The following is a summary of the Undergraduate Students Association Council and Graduate Students Association's summer meetings.

■ June — The GSA publications office was robbed of over $8,000 in uninsured computer hardware, according to GSA President Konrad Huntley. A Macintosh computer, Laserwriter printer, and document reader were the three items stolen. The equipment has not been recovered. GSA has allocated over $9,000 for replacement items.

■ June 28 — USAC passed a resolution creating a task force to investigate history Professor Stanford Shaw's teaching practices. The Armenian Students Association claimed Shaw was teaching historical lies by denying the existence of an Armenian genocide during World War I. Shaw said he no longer covers that subject in his Turkish history class. The task force is scheduled to submit a report to council by Oct. 1, and may request that Shaw be investigated by the Academic Senate.
(Summer Bruin, July 7)

■ June 28 — GSA voted to have a representative participate in the USAC task force to investigate Professor Shaw's teachings.

■ July 12 — History department chair Joyce Appleby told USAC she disapproved of its June 28 resolution, saying it could threaten academic freedom. After hearing Appleby's comments, USAC did not change its original request. (Summer Bruin, July 18)

■ July 12 — History department chair Joyce Appleby addressed a GSA meeting, saying there was no need to form the task force. The GSA Cabinet decided to continue its participation in the task force.

■ July 12 — Academic Affairs Commissioner Florencia Aranovich questioned USA President Michael Meehan's selection of student government appointees. Aranovich said the president had so far appointed only white males, while Meehan said he had picked the most qualified candidates.
(Summer Bruin, July 18)

■ August 16 — Office space allocations caused arguments between the affected student groups and USAC. Chicanos for Community Medicine, Raza Women and the California Public Interest Research Group lost their Kerckhoff Hall office space, while the Inter-Residence Hall Council and American Indian Student Association were accommodated. Some special interest groups, dissatisfied with the allocations, questioned USAC's selection procedures. (Summer Bruin, Aug. 18). However, Raza Women and CCM will not be without office space this year. The groups will be accommodated on the third floor of the Men's Gym, as part of a Community Resource Center being funded by the university.

■ August 23 — Over protests from special interest groups and some council members, USAC passed its budget for the 1988-1989 fiscal year. The Black Student Alliance and MEChA received budget cuts of 46 and 30 percent, respectively, while the Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic Council and International Students Association's budgets were increased. Community Service Commissioner John Sarvey accused the budget subcommittee of using a "political spoils system," while General Representative Mike Spence defended the allocations, saying USA President Michael Meehan's budget would not have been cut if a political spoils system existed.
(Summer Bruin, Aug. 25)

■ August 30 — USAC passed a motion to formally request that UCLA's gay and lesbian newspaper TenPercent print an explanation of its June editorial which printed the home addresses and phone numbers of eight then council members. General Representative Mike Spence, who introduced the motion, had considered making another motion to prohibit the use of USAC funds for advertisements in TenPercent, but chose chose to request the explanation.
(Summer Bruin, Sept. 1)

■ August 30 — Academic Affairs Commissioner Florencia Aranovich and Campus Events Commissioner Greg Ambrose questioned USA President Michael Meehan's appointment procedure after he reappointed two students who were found to be ineligible for their posts at the time the original appointments were made. Nevertheless, USAC reinstated Communications Board appointee Peggy Lee and Student Fee Advisory Committee appointee Scott Perry, who are now eligible.

ENROLLING: Tele-registration

A poll of 400 BYU students last year showed that 98.8 percent felt telephone enrollment was easy to use. BYU administrators also credit telephone enrollment with a 40 percent decline in request for dropping classes.

The benefit of telephone enrollment for students, said Childs, is that they will know immediately over the phone whether they received the classes they wanted.

Although Mihaljevich is optimistic that the system will work, he is concerned that UCLA may have too few phone lines to handle all 23,000 students. Because UCLA's enrollment system is only capable of handling 32 students at one time, he said there is the possibility of constant busy signals.

BYU, the largest private university with an enrollment over 27,000 students, had to expand its system to overcome just such a problem.

"Although BYU started with 32 lines, we expanded our system to 48 (lines) so that we could handle more students," said Childs.

In October, the UCLA Registrar's Office plans to add eight more lines to bring the capacity up to 40. The entire system will cost approximately $140,000, Mihaljevich estimated.

Despite the obstacles facing telephone enrollment, Mihaljevich believes the system will succeed. During a test last spring quarter, 600 students enrolled by phone. Only 20 needed to seek assistance beyond their instruction booklets.

During summer orientation, 3500 freshmen also enrolled by phone. "The system works very well," said Bruce Barbee, director of orientation. "I feel that it's been very successful.

"The most important thing is that students have to be prepared; we're going to set a time limit," said Mihaljevich.

Other universities with telephone enrollment include Georgia State and Ohio State. Both USC and UC San Diego are currently developing systems that are expected to be operational by January.

COMMUTING: Many options

may be obtained at the Commuter Assistance-Ridesharing Office or at parking kiosks around campus.

For those who consider these options inconvenient, there are others that make getting up early and scrambling for a parking space near UCLA unnecessary.

Students who live further than 20 miles from campus might consider vanpool service, which has been in operation since 1984 to help alleviate the traffic congestion anticipated during the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles.

This service requires either a monthly or a daily fee. A monthly pass guarantees riders a seat on the van, which holds 15 people, the fee depending on where a person lives. The further the commute, the higher the fee.

Five-dollar daily round-trip passes do not guarantee a seat on the van and students may be required to wait at the last stop should it make several stops before arriving at UCLA. This practice ensures monthly pass holders will get seats.

Vanpools are available from as far as Moreno Valley and Rialto, which require 170- and 152-mile daily commutes, respectively. The vans arrive and depart from UCLA according to the schedules of the drivers and those who hold monthly passes.

According to Griessel, students can establish a vanpool in their area if they have a minimum of 8 people living in that particular area. One of the participants, however, must be willing to drive.

Joyel Almajano, a UCLA sophomore who takes the van from Torrance, describes the service as "good." He considered the vanpool last year because he didn't receive a parking permit and was denied housing in the residence halls.

Ex-undergrad president dead at 27

Samuel Law 'ushered in whole era' at UCLA

By Richard Hopkins, Staff Writer

Samuel Law, 1981-82 UCLA undergraduate student body president, died Sept. 4 in an accident at his parents' Van Nuys home. He was 27.

Law was electrocuted while attempting to remove a whirlpool device from his parents' swimming pool, said Det. Mel Arnold of the Van Nuys Police Dept. Law was transferred to Valley Hospital Medical Center in Studio City, where an attempt to revive him was unsuccessful.

Law was standing in his parents' pool when he removed the metal whirlpool device and placed it on top of an electric pump, said Arnold.

Arnold reported that Law had earlier warned people in the pool not to touch the whirlpool device, warning of the risk of electrocution.

Law was the first Asian to become undergraduate president at UCLA when he won the post in a May, 1981 run-off election.

Before his presidential post, Law served as director of UCLA's Asian Coalition.

"His death was essentially a sacrifice in that there was an instrument (the whirlpool device) that was threatening to the people in the pool, and Sam took it upon himself to shut it off to protect others," said Berky Nelson, a friend of Law and director of the UCLA Center for Student Programming, in an interview with The Daily Bruin.

Among the nearly 300 people who attended Law's funeral was Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley, Nelson said. Law had once worked for Bradley's re-election, he added.

According to Nelson, Mayor Bradley said at the funeral that Law was "super intelligent, had unlimited energy, and basically his resume would be commensurate to five other individuals."

Feelie Lee, director of Pacific Rim Studies for UCLA Extension and a family friend of Law, said he "was a 'can-do' president who was very much oriented towards social justice with an emphasis on the underdog and the less privileged.

"He really ushered in a whole era of a different kind of student government which was of the people and for the people, before it was pretty much dominated by one set group," Lee recalled.

Samuel Law

David Schreier, 1981-82 undergraduate student cultural affairs commissioner, said the former undergraduate president had "touched a lot of people, and gave a lot to himself."

After graduating from UCLA in 1983, Law was chosen in the same year over 300 applicants for a state senate fellowship, according to a Sept. 9 Los Angeles Times article. He also worked in the office of state Senator Newton Russell for a year.

Death

"I talked to (Kirson's father) and told him what I knew, and that's when we knew he was missing," said Milani.

A missing persons report was filed by Kirson's father on Sept. 18, but the search was delayed until Sept. 22 because of poor visibility caused by low clouds, according to Knox.

In 1986, Kirson was selected as runner-up for the national "Boy of the Year" award and had breakfast at the White House with President Reagan, according to Allen Young, director of the Santa Monica Boys Club.

Kirson was also selected twice to represent U.S. Boys Clubs at two international youth exchanges in West Berlin and England, said Young.

"Wolfe was one of the finest kids I've ever known . . . This is breaking everybody's heart," said Young.

According to Young, Kirson was buried Sept. 23 near Sequoia National Park. Memorial services are scheduled for this Wednesday, Sept. 28, at 4 p.m. at the Santa Monica Boys Club, 1238 Lincoln Blvd., Santa Monica.

The Kirson family requests that instead of buying flowers for the services, people should make a donation to the Boys Club's Wolfe Kirson Scholarship Fund, Young said.

(Mis)adventures await UCLA students studying abroad

By Cathy Mitchell
Contributor

Caryn Bram thought she was going to Mexico last quarter to learn Spanish. What she picked up was a new family.

Her new "mother" insisted on serving her breakfast every morning before she went to school. Dinner with her family was mandatory. Her new brothers monitored her social life. Suddenly all her decisions became a family matter.

Not every student who studies abroad will find an adoptive family, but most will become intimately involved in a new culture.

Bram studied in Mexico through the Guadalajara Program which is run in coordination with the Spanish department and the International Studies and Overseas Programs. The course fulfilled her foreign language requirement for graduation purposes. But students who wish to study in a foreign country have two other options.

The best-known program, the Education Abroad Program, is open only to honors students. Students are guaranteed UC credit while studying abroad and are eligible for increased financial aid.

In 1989-1990 approximately 1300 honors students from the UC system, 50 of them from UCLA, are expected to attend more than 85 universities worldwide. Through the EAP program, students can do anything from spending a quarter studying politics, culture and language in Hungary to a year in Hong Kong.

There are also short-term programs in Mexico and Costa Rica. The Study and Field Experience Program in Mexico places students in the field or in hospitals. Biology students can study Spanish while doing field work in the tropical rain forest of Monteverde, Costa Rica.

Students must show a minimum 3.0 grade point average and be proficient in the language of their host country. Students studying in Kenya begin studying Swahili after they arrive, however.

fee is directly under the control of the chancellor at each campus and is determined on a "per capita" basis according to pre-quarter enrollment statistics. The educational fee, on the other hand, is a sum of money allocated by the UC president's office to each campus.

The way of determining how much each campus will get is what Pierce terms "a very convoluted process which nobody seems to understand." He said that UCLA and Berkeley, the two largest schools in the UC system, probably take the largest share.

When Italian graduate student Vincenzo Pandolfo was asked how UCLA fees compared to those in his own country, he stated, "there is no comparison."

Pandolfo said that it would cost him only about $1,000 a year to go to an Italian university, but that he had wanted to go to school in the United States.

In terms of fees at other American universities, however, Pandolfo asserted that UCLA was "pretty much a good bargain after all," compared to "business schools like Wharton or a private institution like Stanford."

Every morning, Almajano catches the van at 6:15. He reaches UCLA in about a half hour because there is not much traffic congestion. He says that during this half hour he can talk or read on the van.

This year, Almajano was unable to get into a residence hall or get a parking permit. He is considering vanpool service again this year and recommends it to those who need a way to get to UCLA without a car.

To participate in the vanpool service, Griessel advises students to call the office as early as possible to secure a place on the van.

For nearly a year, the Commuter Assistance-Ridesharing Office has also been offering carpooling as a transportation alternative.

A minimum of three people are needed to participate and a computer is used to match the carpool participants according to the area in which they live.

This option may invite corruption, however. Students, for instance, may get two friends to help them get parking permits.

However, Griessel hopes the carpool service is not abused. When asked if there has been instances of abuse, she responded, "Not that I know of."

The new UCLA/Westwood commuter line scheduled to begin service in January will use buses to transport students from two designated locations directly to UCLA. The two locations being considered include the Studio City area of the San Fernando Valley and the LAX and Westchester area.

These buses would leave hourly from 7 to 9 a.m. and from 4 to 6 p.m.

And of course, there are always the city buses, which include the RTD, the Santa Monica Bus Lines and the Culver City Municipal Bus Lines.

Bus schedules are available at the one week earlier, Kaye said, but when former editor-in-chief Jenny Wrenn "asked and asked" to see the paper, Walters said repeatedly that the editorial was not yet done.

"He held onto it for the last possible minute," Kaye reiterated in a telephone interview.

The editorial asserted that USAC's "right-wing" ousted former undergraduate president-elect Lloyd Monserratt during last spring's elections, and asked readers to contact and challenge the former members on their alleged homophobic stand during the elections.

USAC removed Monserratt from office in June after it was discovered that he was academically ineligible for the post.

The unsigned editorial was the opinion of most of the editors, Walters claimed. "The editor-in-chief saw it, and the managing editor saw it."

"I did look at part of (the editorial) but I only looked at the very beginning of it . . . I didn't see it in its finished form," Wrenn responded, adding that she didn't see the names and addresses.

"It's true that it wasn't all of Doug's article," she said.

"I feel I was remiss in looking out for the paper. I pretty much left it in the hands of Doug Walters," Wrenn said.

Wrenn was completing her graduate thesis in June and allowed Walters to become the guest editor-in-chief.

Kaye said she had spoken to "a very large portion of last year's staff," and the majority did not agree with the printing of the names and addresses.

Wrenn recognized that Walters was under "lots of pressure" to print the editorial, but said she "was a bit upset about Doug printing those names and addresses."

As guest editor, Walters said he oversaw most articles and was responsible for prioritizing stories. "As far as the editorial, it was not written by me — as most people believe. I take responsibility for editing it."

"Apparently, (Walters) told other people he wrote it. From what I hear, he did," Kaye said.

Although some USAC members said the editorial prompted death threats against former council members, Walters said its only intention was for readers to contact them "to get (the gay and lesbian community's) questions answered."

Walters said the timing of the editorial was "unfortunate," because it appeared during a "violent" election. He was referring to the June election where demonstrators destroyed polling booths in support of Monserratt.

General Representative Mike Spence, who introduced the motion requesting the printing of an explanation at the Aug. 30 meeting, had considered another motion to prohibit the use of USAC funds for advertisements in the publication.

Passing such a motion would have prevented USAC-sponsored groups from using USAC funds to advertise in the newspaper. The newsmagazine's size would have been cut by at least three pages, Kaye said. USAC ads compose about one-fourth of the publication, she added.

Legionnaire's

The majority of those stricken had severe respiratory diseases, or were transplant or cancer patients. For the transplant patients the weakening was due to drugs designed to keep patients from rejecting transplanted organs, Parris added.

These patients were in the greatest danger because the Legionella bacteria is an "opportunistic organism," said Dr. David Bruckner, a pathologist who works in the hospital's clinical microbiology lab where the organism was diagnosed. He explained that the bacteria is called opportunistic because it remains harmless until an 'opportunity,' such as a weakened immune system, allows it to grow and cause damage to the body.

The organism is very common in the environment but people with normally functioning immune systems have no danger of contracting the disease, Bruckner added.

The hospital finally traced the organism to the hospital's hot water system, which has since been completely cleaned and is now being monitored closely, Parris said.

She explained the county health department requires temperatures for hot water in hospitals be kept at certain levels to eliminate the danger of patients scalding themselves; however, these temperatures also allow the bacteria to live.

The hospital now superheats the water to kill any bacteria present and then mixes it with cold water to cool it before it reaches patients, Parris said.

She also said that the Centers for Disease Control of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services was consulted about the outbreak but declined to get involved.

"They felt that what was being done was more than adequate and that there was no reason for them to get involved," she said.

Another recent Legionnaire's outbreak occurred at the Westwood Horizons retirement home in June and

L.A. County Fair

Pickles, pretzels and pig races — what could describe the Los Angeles County Fair more accurately?

The fair, a Los Angeles tradition, annually offers a variety of arts and crafts, photography, as well as culinary and educational exhibits.

Hand-crafted quilts, delicately sewn bridal gowns and homemade Christmas ornaments are beautifully displayed in one exhibit prepared with the same care in which the gowns and ornaments were constructed. In another exhibit, award-winning cakes and cookies hide behind a glass display case, just waiting to be eaten.

Fair-goers can visit medal-winning rabbits, pigs, cows and sheep. For a closer look, children may feed juvenile llamas, goats and fawns in a petting zoo. Children can also ride elephants and camels.

New gadgets, junior high and high school students' art submissions and exotic flora and fauna displays can be seen in other exhibits.

Other fair activities include ice sculpture competitions, celebrity look-alike contests, hog races, and of course, partaking in that L.A. County Fair tradition — eating.

The fair will continue until Oct. 2.

Researchers probe mystery of memory

By Whitney Woodward
Staff Writer

Scientists at the UCLA Brain Research Institute have traced the recognition of words and faces to single nerve cells and nerve cell groups in the brain. The research, recently published in an issue of the British scientific journal Nature, is believed to be the first to show that individual nerve cells can recognize specific words.

Headed by Dr. Eric Halgren, UCLA associate professor of psychiatry and biobehavioral science and neuropsychologist for the California Comprehensive Epilepsy Program, the research team was able to pinpoint individual neurons responding, or "firing," in the brains of epileptic patients when certain words were flashed on a video monitor.

The word "luck," for example, caused one brain cell to fire repeatedly while the words "carve" and "woe" were found to cause other specific nerve cell responses.

Dr. Halgren explained that the 10 epilepsy patients who took part in the experiment already had electrodes implanted in their brains as a standard preoperative monitoring examination prior to surgery. The patients were asked to memorize words and faces shown on a video monitor and to press a key when they were presented with the images they had seen before. The electrodes enabled the scientists to determine exactly which neurons reacted to the visual stimuli.

The research team observed a pattern of activity in the hippocampus, a section of the brain that is believed to play a key role in information storage and retrieval. The hippocampus responded uniquely to each word in a particular context, regardless of whether the word was repeated or not.

Currently, there are two theories concerning the specific contribution of the hippocampus to short-term memory. One theory suggests that the hippocampus aids the recognition of events by providing a simple signal to the rest of the brain. However, the UCLA team found no overall change in hippocampal activity that could be used to distinguish words occurring for the first time from those which had been seen several times before.

This supports the alternate theory that the hippocampus combines the various elements that make up an event into a memory "trace" or imprint.

"When a cell receives convergent excitation from other nerve cells, the connections (between the cells) gets strengthened — this is a memory trace," said Halgren. Later, referring to any part of the trace leads to the entire memory being activated, Halgren said.

If a person was asked what he or she had eaten for breakfast that morning, for example,

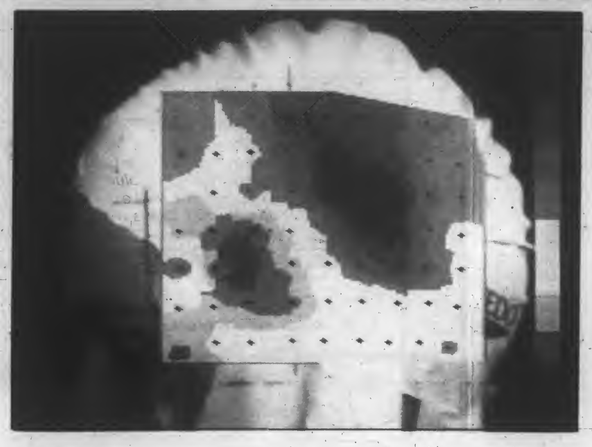

Mapping the brain: In the lab of Dr. Jackson Beatty, the brain of graduate student Russ Johnson is shown responding to speech through a technique called neuromagnetic imaging, which charts the paths of the brain's magnetic fields. The blue area shows where the field exits the brain, the red shows where it enters. The source of the field is indicated by the white area between these two points, while the distance between the two gives an indication of how deep in the brain the source is. Through this technique Beatty is able to determine three-dimensionally where the field originated.

UCLA expands brain exploration

$1.2-million supercomputer to help unravel intricacies

By Patrick McGee
Science/Academics Editor

"Nothing can withstand the powers of the mind. Barriers, enormous masses of matter, the remotest recesses are conquered; all things succumb; the very heaven itself is laid open."

—Marcus Manilius,
1st century Roman poet

For nearly 2000 years, scientists have been using the powers of the mind to uncover the remotest recesses of Manilius' universe. But the most elusive territory to chart has been a mass of 10 billion neurons called the human brain.

In an attempt to cast light into these recesses, UCLA has begun the Cognitive Science Program, an inter-disciplinary project that will use a $1.2-million supercomputer to help expand exploration of the brain to unravel its intricacies.

The project involves nearly 50 UCLA faculty members from areas as diverse as philosophy, linguistics, neuroscience and physiological psychology. Another key area represented is artificial intelligence, a field of computer science which constructs computer systems that attempt to mimic intelligent action.

The project seeks to answer questions as basic as How do we learn? How do we process information? How do we recall events from our past?, questions as pertinent and perplexing today as they were in Manilius' time.

"Philosophers for thousands of years have thought about the mind and how the mind functions. Philosophers still deal with fundamental questions like the difference between the brain and the mind . . . with fundamental questions about language and the philosophy of language, with fundamental questions about logic," said Gerald Kissler, vice-provost of the College of Letters & Science.

Diverse perspectives

While most people see the study of the mind as something strictly within the realm of psychology, Kissler and others in the program believe that for the mind to be truly understood it must be approached in a variety of ways.

"Different people from these different fields are interested in the brain," he explained. "They're all interested in the mind in one way or another, but they come at the problem from different angles and that's the beauty of putting them together in one program."

One of these diverse perspectives is offered by Chuck Taylor, an associate professor of biology interested in the evolution

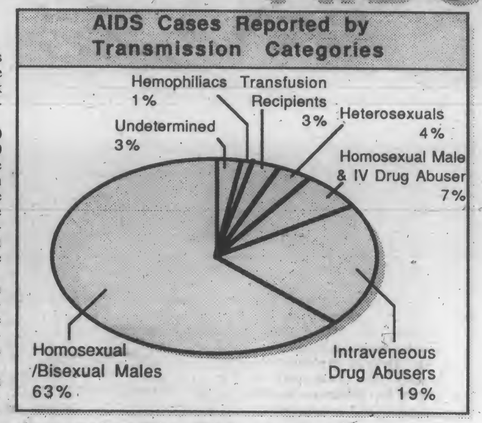
UCLA researchers gain insight at AIDS conference

AIDS

By Patrick McGee
Science/Academics Editor



For UCLA students, the days of June 12-16 were a welcome respite from the previous week of frantic all-nighters in preparation for finals.

But for an estimated 7,000 AIDS experts from nearly 140 countries, the four days were spent in Stockholm, Sweden, in an attempt to keep abreast of the flood of information on the AIDS virus. Among the participants at this Fourth International Congress on AIDS were three researchers from UCLA.

The overall consensus from the media concerning the conference was that there was little new, ground-breaking information presented. Dr. Steven Miles agreed with the assessment.

"That's correct, but that's not bad. The field has matured slowly . . . you can't expect startling new developments every day," said Miles, a hematology/oncology specialist who is the senior investigator for UCLA's AIDS center.

"This (information from the conference) is not going to make the front page of the news, but it has tremendous implications in developing therapies and vaccines," he continued. "It's methodical, it takes a lot of time . . ., but it will get us towards a vaccine."

While Miles said that much could be learned from the "basic methodical plodding" that is a necessary part of finding an AIDS vaccine, others in attendance felt inundated by the sheer amount of material presented. Researchers delivered an estimated 3,000 papers.

"A lot of the immunology has become even more confusing due to people reporting conflicting results," said Dr. Susan Plaeger-Marshall, an immunologist who specializes in patients' responses to virus infection.

Dr. Ronald Mitsuyasu, associate director of the UCLA AIDS center, agreed, saying that "you have to kind of take the information presented with a grain of salt" because no formal reviewing committee was able to examine the research papers before they were delivered. He added that many of the hypotheses offered were based only on preliminary findings.

Among the information discussed:

■ In the United States a new case of AIDS is documented every 14 minutes, with the actual number of cases exceeding Center for Disease Control estimates by over 12 percent. 365,000 new cases are predicted by 1992. Numbers linked to heterosexual transmission remain low for the predictions, but represent the highest rate of change (from 1 percent in 1982 to 2.7 percent in 1987).

■ In Africa, 11,500 official AIDS cases represent 8 percent of the world's total — a number that many experts consider to be vastly underestimated given the fact that the HIV carrier rate may approach 10 million. Heterosexual spread of AIDS is of the greatest concern because of the high incidence of genital ulcers, which greatly heighten susceptibility to HIV.

■ In Europe there were 12,221 AIDS cases, representing a 115 percent increase over the previous year. Switzerland, France and Denmark had the highest per capita rate, three to four per 1,000.

While the three participants may have felt overwhelmed by the deluge of statistics and information, there are certain studies and insights that stay in their minds.

Plaeger-Marshall cited a new test that can detect fragments of the AIDS virus in people previously thought to be uninfected.

"The implications for this are kind of scary," she said. "This is the type of person you could envision giving blood without their even knowing that they

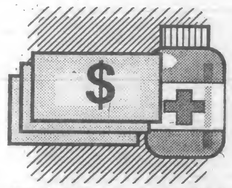
College, health, and insurance:

About 25 percent of UCLA students unprotected

By Laurel Eu
Contributor



During registration, about 7000 students will elect to buy UCLA's student Medical Insurance Plan. Of the 26,000 students registering at UCLA this fall not buying the insurance, it is estimated that about 50 percent are covered by other insurance plans.

Therefore, in short, 25 percent of UCLA's student body will not be covered by any health insurance. They elect to take this risk for various reasons.

One possibility is that students may believe they cannot afford the insurance. Last May, Assemblyman Tom Hayden (Democrat) reported that college costs rose by 91 percent from 1980 to 1987, forcing six out of 10 undergraduate students to take out student loans. He said that 53 percent of undergraduates went into debt to finance their education.

These uninsured students may assume or simply hope that their medical needs will not be a problem. For UCLA students who have paid registration fees, Student Health Service (SHS) will meet many of their general and specialized health care needs.

Funded by a portion of the registration fees, SHS offers fairly comprehensive outpatient services at no charge. Services include clinician visits, routine x-rays, some laboratory tests and a wide array of support services.

Many students believe that their chances for medical problems are not likely enough to warrant specialized diagnostic and treatment procedures not covered by SHS. Unfortunately, these problems often result in devastating financial consequences.

Student Health Service reports that unanticipated medical expenses from hospitalization and other procedures can and do affect many students.

"For uninsured students, the experiences are very painful," said Al Setton, Executive Director at SHS. "For these students, the Student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) could have reduced devastating financial losses due to medical costs."

MIP is designed to cover much of the costs and reduce the risks of financial liability incurred for diagnostic work and laboratory tests not done in Student Health. Most importantly, it covers hospitalization. It provides benefits up to a maximum of $100,000.

Some students may elect to purchase a supplemental plan, the Catastrophic Supplement Plan (CSP), which increases benefits up to $1 million.

"It is not uncommon for a student to come into Student Health and end up having to be admitted to a hospital," said Michele Pefarson, manager of SHS medical records. "We average around 12 to 15 admissions per month during the fall for problems such as pneumonia, moped injuries, gastrointestinal problems and appendicitis."

"Also, if a student comes in after SHS's normal operating hours (after 4:45 p.m.) they may have to be seen at the UCLA Hospital Emergency Room," Pearson added. "It easily costs more than $100 for a visit to the emergency room. Insurance will help to cover those costs."

The daily room rates for a multi-bed ward and semi-private accommodations in a hospital are approximately $400. If one requires intensive care, the daily room rate can range from $1100 to $3700, depending on requirements such as critical care or isolation procedures.

"Miscellaneous costs, such as bandages, medication and intravenous therapy can run an additional $600 to $1000 per day, making the total costs for a day in the hospital approximately $1400," said Linda Amicarelli, SHS insurance coordinator. "This does not include physician fees or anesthesiologist fees."

"A hospital stay for pneumonia could cost $5000 and a knee surgery patient could anticipate $1400 a night," Amicarelli added.

Dr. Deborah Shlian, SHS director of primary care, said that students may be surprised to learn that appendicitis, which requires hospitalization, is most common between the ages of 15 and 24.

"At the time of admission to the hospital, if the patient is not in emergency status, a financial statement will be taken. Insurance then becomes a very important issue," Dr. Shlian explained. "For the most part, those who are uninsured often cannot be admitted into the UCLA facility and are transferred to County General."

While Shlian believes that all college students should have medical insurance, she under stands this is just not the case.

"In reality, college is a time when a surprisingly large number of individuals are not covered," said Setton. "This is because many individuals previously covered by parental health insurance are typically no longer covered over age 23.

"The majority of the population receives its health care coverage through employment. Students, of course, are smack between leaving home and being part of the workforce."

The next opportunity to purchase MIP is during winter quarter registration. For more information on the plan, call 825-1856.

UCLA Year in Science and Research

Compiled by Pat McGee
Science/Academics Editor

Editor's note: The following is a roundup of UCLA's year in science and research.

■ September 28, 1987 — The AIDS virus resembles a naturally produced human protein necessary to the well-being of some kinds of nerve cells, researchers at UCLA and the University of Chicago discovered. Their findings, reported in the journal Science, could explain how infection with the AIDS virus can cause loss of memory and other neurological ailments, said Dr. Mark Gurney, one of the UCLA researchers. (Chicago Tribune)

■ October 15, 1987 — UCLA chemistry professor Donald J. Cram won the Nobel prize in chemistry for his work on synthesizing molecules that mimic important biological processes. Cram shared the prize with French researcher Jean-Marie Lehn and American Charles J. Pedersen. He is UCLA's third Nobel laureate and the school's second chemist to win the citation. (Daily Bruin)

■ November 3, 1987 — UCLA researchers announced that they created "molecular scissors" which cut genetic material into large pieces, a discovery which may help scientists map the sequence of chemical bases in genes and ultimately decipher the human genetic codes. The "scissors" consist of an artificial enzyme that that severs DNA into longer segments than were previously obtainable, said researchers Dr. David Sigman and Dr. Betty Chen. (Daily Bruin)

■ November 11, 1987 — Two astronomers, including UCLA professor Bruce Zuckerman, announced that they discovered an apparent planet-like object the size of Jupiter rotating around a dying star some 50 light years from earth.

"We think the most likely explanation of what we found is a brown dwarf," said Zuckerman. He said that the brown dwarf is a gaseous body larger than any known planet with a diameter nearly 15 percent of the sun. If the finding is supported by additional research, it will be the first confirmed brown dwarf, a phenomena that astronomers have theorized about for decades but have never observed. (The Associated Press)

■ January 14, 1988 — Every living thing now on Earth descended from bacteria that probably thrived in near-boiling water and raised a stench like rotten eggs, a study by a UCLA researcher suggested. The organism, which apparently lived at least 3.5 billion years ago, was the last ancestor shared by all of today's life forms, said UCLA molecular biologist James Lake. (The Associated Press)

■ January 21, 1988 — Robert Katzman, 33, became the first Californian to receive a combined pancreas-kidney transplant at the UCLA Medical Center.

"They took a diabetic and made him a non-diabetic, which is a phenomenon in itself," said Katzman, a diabetic since childhood, after he successfully recovered from the operation.

■ February 11, 1988 — UCLA researchers reported that smoking a single marijuana cigarette may pose the same health risk as smoking five tobacco cigarettes, according to a study published in the New England Journal of Medicine. The study compared marijuana and tobacco smoking and found that a marijuana cigarette leaves nearly five times the amount of carbon monoxide in the bloodstream as a tobacco cigarette. (Daily Bruin)

■ February 26, 1988 — UCLA School of Medicine researchers announced that they identified the chemical nature of a bodily substance capable of lowering blood pressure and preventing blood clotting. Dr. Louis Ignarro, professor of pharmacology at UCLA, determined that the naturally occurring substance nitric oxide is one of several molecules responsible for relaxing blood vessels, thereby lowering blood pressure. (Daily Bruin)

■ March 18, 1988 — Programs to reach federal government goals of controlling cancer by the year 2000 remain a "qualified failure," according to a prominent UCLA expert. Dr. Lester Breslow, of UCLA's Jonsson Comprehensive Cancer Center, argued in a study that smoking-related cancers in people 55 and over are likely to overwhelm progress against all other types of the disease in every other age group. (Los Angeles Times)

■ April 22, 1988 — Eight people who broke into UCLA's Brain Research Institute and barricaded themselves inside to protest the use of animals in scientific research were arrested by UC police and charged with burglary. Researchers charged that the protesters caused $5.6 million worth of property damage and lengthy research delays. (Daily Bruin)

■ August 4, 1988 — A study by two UCLA researchers reported that the chronic use of hard drugs in adolescence could seriously hinder the personal and social development of teenagers, regardless of whether they continue taking drugs. The study also found that the vast majority of teenagers who occasionally drink or use drugs will not suffer adverse effects later in life, and usually cannot be distinguished from those who abstained from drugs.

Dr. Michael Newcomb, adjunct associate professor of psychology and one of the principal authors of the study, cautioned that the results of the study don't "mean that a kid should think that it's O.K. to try drugs, because they may be the one who can't handle it. It's not worth risking your future." (Daily Bruin)

■ August 11, 1988 — A UCLA clinical study on the effectiveness of condom use for prevention of AIDS was halted while government officials searched for a way to do the research without compromising medical ethics, officials said. Jeffrey Perlman, chief of contraceptive evaluation for the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development, said a panel studying the problem decided to cancel condom tests among a selected homosexual population in Los Angeles because the research might encourage some people in the study to engage in high-risk sex. (Daily Bruin)

RESEARCH: Probing memory

of these diverse perspectives is offered by Chuck Taylor, an associate professor of biology interested in the evolution of the brain and intelligence. He sees the program as an attempt to "understand how the hardware and the software (of the brain) interact."

Disciplines like psychology study what Taylor calls the "software" of the brain while fields like neurobiology study the "hardware," the areas which control specific functions like speech and movement.

More specifically, Taylor is interested in the path of the brain's evolution, why "evolution has evolved us so that our minds have such a small door on perception." Taylor wants to know what determined that door's size and location.

The Connection Machine

Such complex questions will require all the knowledge and expertise that he and his interdisciplinary team members can muster. But it will also require some sophisticated equipment, such as a $1.2-million computer called the Connection Machine.

The computer, which was dedicated in Boelter Hall on Aug. 4, was made possible by a grant from the National Science Foundation (NSF), which provided 75 percent of the funds, with UCLA supplying the balance.

The program has also been enhanced by a gift of 40 computer work stations from Apollo Computer Inc. The gift, valued at $1.5 million, will allow faculty members throughout the campus to interface with the Connection Machine and to communicate with each other. These workstations, together with the Connection Machine, make up the cognitive computer network (COGnet).

Kissler said the Connection Machine is an unusual piece of equipment because of its construction. "Most computers have one central processing unit (the 'brain' of the computer). Sometimes you get up to machines that have two or eight," he said. "This one has 16,000."

Conventional computers use a linear process of computation that requires them to solve a problem one step at a time, while the Connection Machine uses a method called parallel processing, which allows the computer to approach a problem from several different angles, much like the brain does.

The Connection Machine "is useful for a number of different kinds of simulations of brain functions," explained Kissler. He said that researchers can link the computer's processors together as if they were neurons in the brain. By observing the operation of these computer "neurons" they can perhaps begin to understand how the same structures work in the human brain.

"With the advent of truly parallel hardware we can test ideas that we haven't been able to up to this point," said Keith Holyoak, professor of psychology and chair of the cognitive science development committee.

"What the machine offers is all the processors working at once and the ability to communicate between them," he explained. "That's what underlies human thinking — these small, microscopic decisions."

In addition to modeling neurons, researchers also plan to use the Connection Machine for experiments in linguistics, artificial intelligence and for processing more accurate images of the brain.

Stephen Anderson, professor of linguistics, said in a February interview with The Daily Bruin that he is thinking about how to use the parallel processing abilities of the Connection Machine to study word recognition problems and to analyze morphology, or how words are built. Anderson is the former chair of the program and is now on sabbatical at Johns Hopkins University.

While he had high praise for the capabilities of research tools such as the Connection Machine, Anderson cautioned, that while technology plays a large part in the program, it should not be allowed to overshadow the other disciplines involved.

Anderson said that although cognitive science is in large part a computational discipline, "it's not computer science, and it's not the same as artificial intelligence, and in fact it's precisely the study of the mind rather than the computer that is the hippocampal trace made at the time would be activated, and the memory of the entire breakfast would be retrieved, the study found.

were infected."

For Mitsuyasu, a telling detail to the state of AIDS research in the Third World was provided by the unlikely source of posters and graphics that were used to present research findings.

He said that graphics and posters for American and European researchers were very sleek and high-tech while the ones for African participants were often hand-drawn with magic markers.

While such a minor detail would appear meaningless to most people, for Mitsuyasu, the African's low-tech graphics served as an indicator of the disparities in funding between First and Third World countries.

July when six people contracted the disease, said Dr. Laurene Mascola, chief of the county's acute communicable disease control division. Four of those infected later died.

The outbreak at the home was traced to a new air-conditioning unit which health officials had dismantled and replaced with a disinfected system, Mascola said.

Those who were stricken at the retirement home were not suffering from any specific medical ailments but had "immune systems that were compromised by age," she said.

Parris explained that there have been similar outbreaks that have occurred at other health centers due to the high number of people in these environments who are immunologically weak.

RE: ACCOMMODATION OF RELIGIOUS PRACTICES OF STUDENTS IN THE SCHEDULING OF EXAMINATIONS

On September 16, 1985, Governor Deukmejian signed into law a provision of the Education Code (Section 92640(a)) applying to the University of California.

"It is the request of the Legislature that the Regents of the University of California develop policies and procedures to insure that each campus of the University, in administering any test or examination, shall permit any student who is eligible to undergo the test or examination to do so, without penalty, at a time when that activity would not violate the student's religious creed. This requirement shall not apply in the event that administering the test or examination at an alternate time would impose an undue hardship which could not reasonably have been avoided."

President Gardner has asked all campuses to demonstrate compliance with this provision.

At UCLA, accommodation for alternative examination dates will be worked out directly and on an individual basis between the student and the faculty member involved.

1. In general, students should make such requests of the instructor during the first two weeks of any given academic term, or as soon as possible after a particular examination date is announced by the instructor.
2. Students unable to reach a satisfactory arrangement with their instructor should contact the University Ombudsman (274 Kinsey Hall, ext. 57627) or the Dean of Students (1206 Murphy Hall, ext. 53871) for assistance.
3. Instructors who have questions, or wish to verify the nature of the religious event or practice involved should contact the University Ombudsman or the Dean of Students for assistance.

This notice of policy will be published regularly in the UCLA Schedule of Classes, the UCLA General Catalog, the UCLA Daily Bruin, and other appropriate publications. This policy has been reviewed and approved by the Academic Senate Committee on Educational Policy. Faculty should remember that while it is fully in their discretion to make arrangements with individual students for alternate exams times, including final exams, faculty must conduct the scheduled final exam time for the class as a whole at the times and places established by the Departmental Chairman and the Registrar, (Regulation A-332 (A) of the Los Angeles Division of the Academic Senate).

RE: UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA POLICY ON SEXUAL HARASSMENT AND COMPLAINT RESOLUTION PROCEDURES UNIVERSITY POLICY

The University of California is committed to creating and maintaining a community in which students, faculty, administrative, and academic staff can work together in an atmosphere free of all forms of harassment, exploitation, or intimidation, including sexual. Specifically, every member of the University community should be aware that the University is strongly opposed to sexual harassment and that such behavior is prohibited both by law and by University policy. It is the intention of the University to take whatever action may be needed to prevent, correct, and, if necessary, discipline behavior which violates this policy.

DEFINITION

Unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature constitutes sexual harassment when:

(a) Submission to such conduct is made either explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of instruction, employment, or participation in other University activity;

(b) Submission to or rejection of such conduct by an individual is used as a basis for evaluation in making academic or personnel decisions affecting an individual; or

(c) Such conduct has the purpose or effect of unreasonably interfering with an individual's performance or creating an intimidating, hostile, or offensive University environment.

In determining whether the alleged conduct constitutes sexual harassment, consideration shall be given to the record as a whole and to the totality of the circumstances, including the nature of the sexual advances and the context in which the alleged incidents occurred.

COMPLAINT RESOLUTION

Experience has demonstrated that many complaints of sexual harassment can be effectively resolved through informal intervention. Individuals who experience what they consider to be sexual harassment are advised to confront the alleged offender immediately and firmly. An individual who chooses not to confront the alleged offender and who wishes help, advice, or counseling may contact the appropriate department chair; the offender's supervisor; the Women's Resource Center (for students), 2 Dodd Hall, (213)825-3945; or the staff of the Ombudsman's Office, 274 Kinsey Hall, (213)825-7627. The Ombudsman's Office and the Women's Resource Center have information about other campus agencies that might provide assistance and can inform the complainant on ways to initiate formal grievance procedures.

and tele-faxed the documents, giving him an overview of what was happening," said Pat McLaran, administrative assistant to ASUCLA Executive Director Jason Reed. "He said he would review the material.

"I don't know whether they felt they had no time to respond or just didn't want to," McLaran said of the representative's absence.

Penny Newman, who says she is a resident of the "Stringfellow Acid Pits" in Riverside, told of her experiences with GE. According to Newman, GE secretly dumped 700,000 gallons of toxic chemicals into the community, resulting in contamination of 400 drinking wells, severe health problems and land depreciation.

"In 1966 my husband and I moved into a small community to raise a family. I was three months pregnant. Two-and-a-half months later I miscarried," Newman recounted.

She said her younger son suffers from seizures, dizziness and quadriplegia. Her older son is legally blind in one eye, has a hip defect, severe asthma and also a sterility problem, adding that her husband has had three surgeries to remove tumors and suffers from severe bronchitis.

"GE is the responsible party in 30 Superfund (dumping) sites — major, big bucks types of sites," said Newman, who claims that GE knew the drinking water was dangerous. "To withhold that information is neither moral nor ethical," she added.

"Many people knew it was a stupid thing to do — it only takes common sense and a little fifth grade math . . . there were other ways of handling it, but it was cheap.

"Don't just be sympathetic with us, do something within your power to help us," she asked of the board members.

According to Ruth Shy, a representative of INFACT (the organization which led a Nestle boycott endorsed by ASUCLA), GE has been involved in many cases of hazardous dumping, although most of the suits have been settled out of court or not yet legally proven.

Apartheid involvement

A Black Student Alliance representative identifying himself only as "Vusi" said he did not want to "dilute the environmental issues," but turned to the topic of GE's involvement with South Africa.

"BSA realizes the fact that we live in a capitalistic society. But there has to be some balance between economic rationalization and equal opportunities, and environmental safety issues as well," he said.

Vusi called for ASUCLA to "sever all ties" with companies doing business with the Republic of South Africa "once they have been found in violation of ASUCLA's ESR Policy." He also handed out a quiz on South Africa in order to "gauge the level of (BOC's) awareness".

BOC Faculty Representative Gary Richardson suggested it might be beneficial to have the answers to the questions.

"I assume that the level of knowledge (is) quite low," he said, "I'm not sure what would be gained by a 3 percent accuracy rate."

Lionel Mandy, GSA Representative, applauded the move. "I'm not intimidated by letting the campus see (the results)," he said.

The additional allegations of GE's covert influence on defense policies, defense procurement, and work place labor practices were also reviewed at the meeting although no action was taken.

A letter from USC professor Joshua Goldstein, objecting to the "revolving door" policy of those moving from careers in the defense industry to those in the political arena (and vice-versa) was read at the meeting.

The letter pertained to UCLA employee George Wilson's petition that read: "The (defense) industry's lobbying efforts distort our political process and divert valuable resources away from human needs. General Electric is the prime example of why U.S. industrial strength is faltering in competition with other nations. They make lousy consumer electronics while contributing to world instability."

Although Carrie Biggs Adams, president of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians (NABET) was not able to attend the meeting, NABET representative Thomas Kennedy read a letter from her to the board members concerning the labor strike at NBC last year. NBC, which at the time had recently been acquired by GE, forced 2,800 union members to strike after they tried to implement a two year contract and made clear their plans to lay off 200 employees.

"You can't spell 'greed' with out GE," Kennedy remarked.

Graduate Student Association Representative Jon Weinberg suggested that a committee be formed to investigate the claims of unethical labor practices and covert defense involvement further, as the BOC members thought that they had insufficient information to condemn GE on such charges.

GSA President Konrad Huntley commented, "the way that all defense companies conduct business is highly questionable. It's not just GE, it's the whole industry and I don't know if it's fair (for BOC) to condemn the whole industry."

ASUCLA to lose profit

ASUCLA will take a loss by imposing sanctions against GE — money that will probably come out of ASUCLA's profits and possibly the Student Rebate program.

Estimated annual gross margin on the sale of GE products such as light bulbs, rechargeable batteries, electrical adapters and photoflash bars sold in the Country Store, Health Sciences Store and the Electronics Department of the main Students' store is $4,800, according to Jason Reed.

Vendor estimates for competitive products are slightly higher. EverReady retail price, for example, may be about 5 percent more than GE's.

One member of the audience, Undergraduate Students Association Facilities Commissioner Jason Weiss, objected to "UCLA taking a political stance" while students had to pay the price. But graduate film student Jim Lane, another observer, commented, "Even when the laws were a little loose, I don't think the GE higher ups would put a toxic dump beside their kids' elementary school . . . I've been on financial aid for five years and I have no problem paying extra for a few batteries or a lightbulb."

Programs unaffected

Board members decided to "phase out" but not immediately replace UCLA's electrical distribution system, which is comprised of GE panel boards

TO: STUDENTS RECEIVING DIRECT EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS FROM GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES (VETERANS AND ELIGIBLE DEPENDENTS, AND SOCIAL SECURITY EDUCATIONAL RECIPIENTS)
FROM: REGISTRAR'S OFFICE

Continued receipt of educational assistance funds is contingent upon the student making normal progress (i.e., completion of a minimum of 12 units per quarter for undergraduates and a minimum of 8 units per quarter/semester for graduates) towards a stated degree objective. The student is urged to consult with his/her Veteran's Administration representative and academic department to determine the specific standards that apply to his/her degree objective.

The Registrar's Office is responsible for notifying the funding governmental agency whenever a student sponsored by the Veteran's Administration is not making normal progress toward a degree objective or changes his/her study load. Educational assistance payments are determined by the number of units in which the student is enrolled and registered during each quarter/semester of the academic year. Any student having questions about this "Official Notice" may contact Paul Taylor in the Registrar's Office, 1134 Murphy Hall, (213) 825-3728. The veteran with a disability may continue to conduct his/her business at the Office for Students with Disabilities (OSD), A255 Murphy Hall, (213) 825-1501.

NOTE: This announcement is intended to alert interested students who receive direct educational assistance payments of the responisibility of the Registrar's Office to notify the sponsoring agencies of any information that may affect the continued payment of the benefit. In no way is a separate and/or double standard of progress, attendance or conduct being imposed upon these students by the University. These are the requirements of the governmental agency.

RE: RELEASE AND DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION FROM STUDENT RECORDS

Pursuant to the Federal Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act of 1974 and the "University of California Policies Applying to the Disclosure of Information from Student Records," students at the UCLA campus have the rights:

1. To inspect and review records pertaining to themselves in their capacity as students;
2. To have withheld from disclosure, absent their prior consent for release, personally identifiable information from their student records, with the exceptions as noted in Section 10.70 of the "University of California Policies Applying to the Disclosure of Information from Student Records" as published in the University of California Policies Applying to Campus Activities, Organizations, and Students (Part B), available in the Office of the Dean of Students, 1206 Murphy Hall; Center for Student Programming, 161 Kerckhoff Hall; and Student Psychological Services, A3-062 Center for the Health Sciences;
3. To inspect records maintained by the campus of disclosures of personally identifiable information from their student records;
4. To seek correction of their student records through a request to amend the records or a request for a hearing; and
5. To file complaints with the Department of Education regarding alleged violations of the rights accorded them by the Federal Act.

The University may publish, without the student's prior consent, items in the category of "public information," which are name, address, telephone number, date and place of birth, major, field of study, dates of attendance, degrees and honors received, the most recent previous educational institution attended, participation in officially recognized activities, including but not limited to intercollegiate athletics, and the name, weight, and height of participants on intercollegiate athletic teams.

Students who do not wish all or part of this "public information" disclosed, may, with respect to the address and telephone number, so indicate on the UCLA Address-/Data portion of the Registration Form, and with respect to the other items of information, by filling out a "Decline to Release Public Information Form" available in the Registrar's Office, 1105 Murphy Hall. If a request is made to withhold from disclosure a student's name and degrees and honors received, the campus cannot make public any honors received by the student, such as election to Phi Beta Kappa, and cannot include the student's name and degree earned in a Commencement Program without the written consent of the student. Similarly, if a request is made to withhold from disclosure a student's name and dates of attendance, a student's status as a student cannot be verified for potential employers without the written consent of the student. Further, if a student's last instruction to the campus is to withhold from disclosure the degree granted to that student and the date on which the degree was conferred, that information cannot be confirmed for a third party in connection with the appointment of that graduate to a new position or in connection with an honor that individual received.

Student records which are the subject of the Federal Act and the University's policies may be maintained in a wide variety of offices. Students are referred to the UCLA Campus and CHS Directory, Campus Departmental listings, pages 1 through 28, and Center for Health Sciences Departmental listings, pages 29 through 44, which list all of the offices which may maintain students' records, together with their campus address and telephone number. Students have the right to inspect their student records in any such office subject to the terms of the Federal Act and the University's policies.

The University's policies and implementing campus procedures and the UCLA Campus and CHS Directory may be inspected in, and information concerning the student's hearing rights may be obtained from the Office of the Dean of Students, 1206 Murphy Hall. A copy of the Federal Act may be reviewed in the Office of the Records Management Coordinator, Room 200, Campus Services Building II.

Bruin Recreation

Bruins sweat it out at UCLA on-campus recreation facilities

By Marlene Casillas
Contributor

A university evokes images of libraries, research labs and tough academic classes. But UCLA provides opportunities to exercise more than the mind.

UCLA, which offers numerous ways to work out the body, has a wealth of recreational facilities and programs that rival any local gym or health spa.

Informal recreation time at all campus facilities allows people to exercise at their leisure. Recreation classes provide people with organized instruction and the Intramural Sports Program enables people to play individual, dual or team sports at all levels.

"The quality of our facilities is comparable to other gyms," said Dan Wax, general manager of the John Wooden Center. "And the cost beats the prices at any club."

Most facilities and classes are free for students, said Wax. Staff and faculty can pay $66 for yearly recreation privileges.

People interested in casual athletic games have numerous choices, said Wax. Campus facilities include courts, fields, gyms and equipment for many sports. The John Wooden Center has 10 racquetball, two squash and six badminton courts.

Basketball enthusiasts dribble, dunk and shoot on courts in the Wooden Center and residence halls. Tennis buffs play at the Los Angeles Tennis Center or the Sunset Canyon Recreation Center.

Volleyball players enjoy the all-sand court at the Saxon Suites. Players also use the two to four indoor volleyball courts at the Wooden Center, Wax said.

The intramural field houses baseball diamonds, plus football and soccer fields.

In addition, players do not always need their own equipment. People can check out a variety of rackets, balls, bases and other equipment for free at the Wooden Center, Men's and Women's Gyms, and residence halls.

"All they need is a student ID or a recreation card," Wax said.

People interested in a "workout" format of exercise also have multiple options.

Community service focus of new group

By Michele Sampogna
Contributor

'We want to make community service a habit, not an exception.'

— Chuck Supple

Students and administrators at California colleges and universities are organizing a new program they hope will become an agent for social change.

Organizers say California Compact, which will hold its first meeting in November, will create incentives for students to participate in community service and use the research and technical resources of their institutions to combat regional problems.

"We want to make community service a habit, not an exception," said Chuck Supple, an organizer of the project and special assistant to UCLA Chancellor Charles Young.

The project, co-chaired by Young and Stanford University President Donald Kennedy, will be headquartered at UCLA. The university "will act as the nerve center for the entire project," said Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Winston Doby.

The vice chancellor, who represents UCLA in the project, will oversee the general direction of its development at UCLA along with Supple, Associate Vice Chancellor of Student Relations Allen Yarnell and Virginia Martinez, a special assistant to the chancellor.

California Compact is designed to encourage college students throughout California to take on civic responsibilities and help develop and expand existing campus community service programs. The objective is to heighten awareness about the value of community service, and provide information and technical assistance to the campuses.

The project will also focus on larger issues in society. Although the specific details have not yet been set, one individual cause — such as homelessness, urban poverty, or literacy — will be the simultaneous main focus of all the California campuses, Doby said.

"Community service has always been an important issue. We are now trying to enhance it by pulling all of the universities' resources together," said Doby. "The Compact will allow us to tackle a common regional problem while acting as a tool to enhance interaction and communication between students — and UCLA with other universities," he said.

California Compact is an outreach of Campus Compact, a coalition of more than 120 college and universities nationwide that help foster public service (Daily Bruin, Jan. 6). It will encompass the University of California, the California State University, California community colleges and private institutions.

The regional organization was prompted by the Human Core legislation, passed September 1987, that requires each California college campus to create its own task force to develop an implementation strategy that will encourage students to perform 30 hours of community service each year beginning this fall (Daily Bruin, Jan. 6).

Members of the project will agree to implement programs and policies designed to provide service activities for students that will significantly augment their classroom learning and contribute worthwhile assistance to the community, Doby said.

The project will aim at developing and advocating public policies to do the following:

- Raise funds from foundations and corporations to create grants for campuses to initiate or enhance community service programs, and for faculty to develop service related courses.
- Provide a forum through which administrators from all segments of higher education in California can support each other and work together to solve problems related to collegiate community service.
- Involve faculty in developing strategies for integrating students' community service learning with classroom education, and in developing rewards and incentives for faculty who support student service learning.
- Develop service projects that combine faculty and student resources from several institutions of higher education within a specific region to address a significant problem such as gang proliferation or teenage pregnancy.
- Serve as a professional association and provide regional workshops, campus consultation visits, and resource materials including a newsletter.
- Recognize and reward outstanding programs and students serving the community.

Out-of-staters sample the California dream

By Susan C. Mills
Contributor

Two bikini-clad women walk along the edge of the beach. A sandy-haired man rides a breaking wave as the sun sets behind him.

Some only watch this scene on television, while others travel thousands of miles to delight in the "California experience." Many of these adventurers can be found at UCLA. They are the out-of-state students.

"California is the only place I know where you can go to the beach in the morning and go skiing that night," said Lori Hoffman, a UCLA senior political science major from Tucson, Arizona.

"I like the fast-paced lifestyle in Los Angeles — the work hard, play hard attitude," said Ryan Lahti, an undeclared junior from Austin, Texas. "There are the beaches and the mountains. You can't get that anywhere else."

Although some out-of-state students come to California to fulfill their adventurous dreams, others find that UCLA's quality education outweighs the "fun in the sun" attitude.

"You can get in your car and drive to San Diego, to San Francisco. There's entertainment beyond your city," said Maylene Au, a senior motion picture/televison major from Oahu, Hawaii. Despite the attractions, however, she said she came to UCLA for its film department.

UCLA "has this rad reputation as far as academics," Lahti commented.

Despite the fun in the sun and the opportunity for quality education, some out-of-state students find that their hopes for a successful stay in California fade as they are cut off from their tradtional support system of family and friends.

"The hardest thing for me was that I came here all alone," said Hoffman. "No one from my high school, nobody from my city that I knew of came here.

"When you are an out-of-state student, your smaller problems are magnified because of the distance," said Tim Spangler, a Freshman Orientation counselor. "Your entire social structure often is taken away from you."

From the beginning, some students have learned not to underestimate the power of their faraway parents.

"When I was a freshman, I had to write this 30-page paper," said Hoffman. "I just couldn't start it. So I called my mom at 8:30 in the morning, crying. She told me that it would all be OK. I finished my paper the next morning. I finished it because my mom told me I could do it."

Alienation is not the only problem that out-of-state students face. They must also adjust to California's high standard of living.

"The rent eats up all my money," said Patty Sachs, a senior English major from Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, who spent a year at the University of Florida at Gainesville. She estimated that rent for a three-bedroom townhouse with a pool and tennis courts in Gainesville is one-quarter less than that of a one-bedroom apartment in Los Angeles.

"There are a lot of things this place offers that would be really fun to do. But you spend so much of your money on living expenses that you don't get to go out and enjoy all the neat things you can do here," Sachs said.

Adapting to California does take some time. "It took me a while, but now I'm more Californian than anything else," said Lahti.

Some will even find it more difficult to go home after graduation. "It will be more of a culture shock when I move back to Florida," said Sachs. "I may want frozen yogurt and there won't be any."

Campus jobs offer friends, money, fun

By Andre Williams
Contributor

Psychologists, academic counselors, managers and students agree — campus jobs can be a rewarding experience for freshmen.

Campus jobs offer flexibility, which counselors argue is very important for the academic success of most working UCLA students.

"Many campus employers are real sensitive to student schedules," said Dr. William Parham, staff psychologist of Student Psychological Services.

"People are here for academic reasons and are employees second," said Mike Mathies, operations manager of Ackerman Union's Cooperage dining facility. "We understand students, and we try to accommodate."

When a student is considering a part-time job, academic counselors such as Jane Moratore, director of counseling in the College of Letters & Science, are concerned about how the job will affect the student's academic work. Freshmen, in particular, are concerned about maintaining good grades while working, Moratore said.

One of her students so feared having to relinquish her campus job that she actually improved her grades, Moratore said. Counselors advise students to work no more than 10 to 15 hours a week.

Cooperage student supervisor Kare Koopman said that having a campus job did not interfere with her studies during her freshman year. In fact, the junior linguistics/psychology major said her job helped. "Other students tell you who the good teachers are," she said.

A campus job can also help a student adjust socially to a vast campus like UCLA, said Mathies. "Students positively make a lot of friends here," he said. "I tell them to think of this as an escape from school."

Koopman enjoyed the social benefits of her job by going to the movies with her co-workers after work.

"(Freshmen) can feel insignificant pretty quickly around here," said Parham.

Although Parham doesn't see a campus job as the panacea for all adjustment problems, he feels that a job can offer personal benefits such as discipline, responsibility and punctuality.

"Working can sustain one's self-identity," Parham said.

On-campus jobs range from food service to clerical positions. Most jobs pay an average starting salary of $5 per hour. Promotions for campus jobs are given after a six-month evaluation of good performance.

Campus job information is available from silent radios in Ackerman Union's Cooperage, billboards in front of restaurants, the Career Planning and Placement Center, and the personnel department located at 205 Kerckhoff Hall.

Two Freshman Summer Program tutors claim they were fired for distributing this poster.

DAN MacMEDAN/Daily Bruin

Margaret Zamudio

EEOC agent Constance McCleridon, who is handling the case, declined to comment, saying the information is not available to the public.

Though Hong and Zamudio are "fine tutors" who "qualify academically" for the jobs, Bermeo said, he chose not to hire them because they "discouraged" incoming students to attend UCLA during spring conferences for the students.

The two protesters do not have the right to turn students away from UCLA, Bermeo said. "Why is it that somebody has the right to decide, to scare, somebody else? Why can't somebody decide for themselves whether they are going to be all right here at UCLA?"

Hong said he did put up posters and wear a T-shirt criticizing the advancement program. The shirt describes a mythical "Adolfo's Summer Session," or "THE A.S.S. PROGRAM," "(which does not feature) genuine commitment to affirmative action; any women faculty; student or staff input; sensitive, multi-ethnic faculty experienced in cross-cultural programs and committed to program goals; or improvement in students' critical thinking skills or students' retention."

Zamudio also acknowledged that on her own time she passed out flyers that stated, "If you have a provision to attend the summer programs, write to the UCLA Admissions Office to request a waiver. You have the right to a 'quality' summer program." The flyer also outlined differences between the previous and the new summer program's structure.

The aim of the tutors' actions was not to discourage incoming students from attending UCLA, but to warn them about conditions for minorities here, where current statistics indicate that six out of 10 affirmative action students do not graduate, Hong and Zamudio claimed.

According to a UCLA study, among under-represented students who entered the university as freshmen in 1982, a little over one-third graduated by the fifth year. In the same year, two-thirds of the white student population graduated.

They were only providing facts for the incoming students with the flyers, Zamudio said.

Bermeo said the flyers were not factual. Even if they were, they only provided a negative side of UCLA, which will inadvertently discourage students, he added.

"Think about it. You're are coming in fresh, and all these people are telling you all these horrible things," Bermeo said.

The facts will actually warn under-represented students that they may fail not because of incompetence, but because the university is not offering support, Zamudio noted.

QUAKE: Preparing UCLA

Gordon. They know the location of all emergency exits, fire extinguishers and operational telephones in their buildings.

In an earthquake, each safety team member will have a specific job.

Each person on campus also will have a specific job, said Frank Trueba, assistant director and emergency coordinator for Sproul Hall.

After an earthquake, everyone must wait for instruction and information. People must cooperate with the emergency officials, who will be identifiable by red arm bands, said Trueba. People also should help any injured person nearby until officials arrive.

Uncooperative people increase the potential for injuries and accidents, said Gordon. Many accidents during and after an earthquake are caused by carelessness and lack of information.

The emergency procedure will vary, depending on the degree of damage. Communication between the coordinators and the campus emergency operation center will enable everyone to obtain necessary outside assistance and information, Gordon said.

The center will consist of key personnel, such as the police chief and the emergency coordinator. The center also will be tied into city and county information networks. Thus, people will receive critical information by listening to campus officials, Gordon said.

UCLA has many resources, such as the campus police, emergency medical technicians and the emergency coordinator network. But disaster-response plan coordinators want UCLA to be as self-reliant as possible.

Thus, coordinators are expanding and refining the plan, she said. Planners are dividing the campus into regions and examining the specific needs of each area. "Some areas of campus pose different problems and require a different answer," Gordon added.

Planners are defining long-term refuge areas to make emergency procedures more efficient. Currently, there are more than 100 short-term evacuation areas. Resources and medical attention will be more efficiently provided if more people are in fewer areas, Gordon said.

Coordinators also are establishing resources of food and water. But obtaining enough supplies for a 72-hour period poses a slight problem, said Gordon. The fresh water pools on campus make water resources easier to secure than food. But officials encourage individual preparation and self-reliance.

Food resources are harder to establish because many existing food supplies are uncooked or in staple form, Gordon said. Planners are examining all food service areas to prepare several supply alternatives.

The disaster-response plan will be completed by the end of this year, she said. Planners want input and suggestions from the campus community to help expand and refine the plan.

"We are trying to bring more people into the plan," said Gordon.

But involving everyone in earthquake preparedness is difficult because of the constant inflow of new people and the variety of their schedules.

The Office of Research and Occupational Safety has tried reaching people in several ways. Brochures, pamphlets and wallet cards have been available at student store and food-service check out stands, and have been distributed in employees paychecks.

In addition, earthquake experts have talked to groups, offices and departments on campus, offering advice to suit specific environments, Gordon said.

The Office of Research and Occupational Safety hopes to reach more students by eventually including earthquake safety information in registration packets, Gordon said. But this still needs to be worked out with the administration.

Disaster planners also hope to stage drills, but must wait until after the disaster-response plan is completed.

Residence halls will be having "Safety and Security Week" from Oct. 2 to Oct. 7, said Trueba. Earthquake preparedness information will be distributed to all residents.

A campus-wide earthquake awareness week is planned for April, California's official earthquake awareness month.

Knowledge and preparation is a preventative measure, Gordon said. Disaster-response planners encourage everyone study all available information and pass it on.

"The more people that are aware of earthquake preparedness, the better the plan will be," said Gordon.

To schedule an earthquake preparedness talk or obtain further information, call Roni Gordon at 825-5611.

CRIME: Campus safety

The Women's Resource Center has the following suggestions for student safety:

- Be especially aware of your surroundings,
- Know the hours of operation of any campus facility you use,
- Use discretion and caution when taking advantage of shortcuts through isolated parts of the campus,
- If you're uncomfortable walking alone, you may want to consider walking with a friend or a couple.

Other than the CSO escort service, which runs from dusk to 1 a.m., UCLA offers several transportation options. Further information is available from the CSO escort service at 825-9800. The Women's Resource Center, located in 2 Dodd Hall, has free information and pamphlets available.

A special self-defense workshop will be offered Saturday, Oct. 8, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Another workshop designed for students with disabilities is scheduled on Oct. 29. Call 206-8240 for more information.

ROOMMATES: Conflict

tant for Irvine's Campus Village housing complex, finds computers too "impersonal" for matching roommates and said she will not use them next year to select roommates.

"Computers can't get a feel for personality," she said. As a result, Galvez believes "students end up getting the shorter end of the stick."

Frank Trueba, assistant director at Sproul Hall, disagrees with the argument that computers are too impersonal to use in selecting roommates. He stressed that they match roommates according to the answers students provide on their housing assignment forms.

The form asks students questions about smoking, alcohol, floor assignment — coed or single-sex — and preferred room noise levels.

A computer matches the answers to these questions and if two students answer all four similarly, they become roommates. Priorities, however, are given to those who mutually request their roommates or ask to live on a special interest floor.

The computer only selects roommates who answer all four questions the same. For persons whom the computer could not find a perfect match, Trueba must manually make roommate selections based on the students' answers to the smoking question.

Trueba says matches are never made on the basis of race. Even if students request not to live with a person of a certain race, that request cannot be honored, said Guy Sanders, assistant director of Hedrick Hall.

However, students are not locked into the same roommates for the whole year. If the two cannot get along, room changes are available.

Though the resident is ultimately responsible for initiating all room changes, the Office for Residential Life is also becoming more involved in promoting better roommate relationships.

"This year, we are providing a roommate relationship workbook for all residents. It is a self-help guide on communicating and developing agreements with your roommate," Gibbons said.

There will also be sessions on roommate relations during the on-campus housing orientation to cover each type of living arrangement. These include a specific session for those living in two- and three-person dormitory rooms and in four- and six-person suites.

These new measures were stimulated by the new three person dormitory rooms, according to Gibbons.

Because of renovations to strengthen Sproul Hall in the event of an earthquake, during the 1988-89 year room shortages have forced some students to opt for the three-person dormitory rooms and six-person suites to increase their chances of obtaining on-campus housing, according to Frank Montana, manager of housing services for the On-Campus Housing Assignment Office and the Community Housing Office.

This year, the four undergraduate residence halls will provide a total of 1189 two-person rooms and 220 three-person rooms, Montana said.

Gibbons anticipates conflict with such dense living arrangements and, consequently, realizes that roommate problems will be more difficult to resolve.

To avoid such problems, another former Hedrick Hall resident advises that roommates be "considerate of each other."

This student described her relationship with her former roommate as "the best.

"We hit it off," she said. "It surprised many, because we came from totally different backgrounds. She was an Armenian from a strict family and I am a black from the inner city.

"We were both considerate of each other," she said. For example, when one of the two wanted to study, the other would limit her guests and phone calls.

However, if the situation doesn't turn out this well, residents can change roommates, although they can do this no earlier than two weeks into the quarter.

Stephanie Dobson, assistant director of Dykstra Hall, explained that students must wait at least two weeks because they should get to know each other and make out roommate agreements in order to "live together in harmony." Two weeks is not enough time for roommates to get to know each other well enough, she said.

Additionally, in the first two weeks the assistant director must make sure that everyone is moved in, according to Trueba. Sanders added that during the first two weeks "there are too many people moving in and the dorm is disorganized and in a bureaucratic mess."

However, exception are made to this rule if there is an emergency or if the situation between the roommates becomes "volatile."

As for inter-hall transfers, Sanders said they may only be made between quarters. There is a $15 application fee for processing such transfers. Hall-to-suite transfers, and vice versa, however, are not granted.

Senior citizens offer sources of knowledge, companionship

By Stella Mittelbach
Contributor

A small group of UCLA students is tapping a little-known source of knowledge and talent while bringing companionship to seniors living in nearby retirement homes.

The Senior Citizens Project, formed on campus six years ago, offers UCLA volunteers a chance to ease the isolation and loneliness of the elderly while benefiting from senior's years of experience, said Abby Wong, a co-director of the program last year.

"It's like history is alive," said Kathy York, a current co-director of the project.

One senior, who is also a psychologist, still wants to lecture, Wong said. "She loves doing it. It's like going to class. She teaches us using the Socratic method."

The volunteers are entertained while picking up information about the past and other cultures through the stories the seniors tell them, said Brian Coyne, a former co-director.

"There's a man who came from Holland who once told me when he worked at Gumps in San Francisco, he waited on what looked like a very ordinary person," Coyne said. The ordinary person "was Howard Hughes.

The senior project is the only official UCLA group that works

The real reason Bermeo did not hire them was that he was embarrassed in front of his superiors, Hong claimed.

Bermeo said he was merely affirming his belief regarding people who criticize the program and was being consistent with his past statements.

"My strongest disagreement is with those who are university and AAP employees and, despite their opposition, still pick up their paycheck, and with those who believe they have the right to tell young high school seniors what to do or not do about their education while they themselves are moving towards, or have only recently received, their degree," Bermeo wrote in June in a 43-page report that explains the structure of the current summer program.

For Hong and Zamudio to work for the summer program would be "hypocritical" and "arrogant," said Bermeo.

Zamudio said she protested because she cares about the program and wants it to be a "quality" one.

Both Bermeo and the tutors charged that the other party did not voice its discontent, but instead took inappropriate actions.

Dettmar made the recommendations to hire Hong on Aug. 12 and to employ Zamudio on Aug. 15.

After Bermeo met the two tutors in a planning meeting for his class on Aug. 17, the three engaged in several discussions during the next 24-hour period about the tutors' employment.

Bermeo finally decided not to employ Hong and Zamudio on Aug. 18.

with the elderly, said Coyne. "Most of the other (service groups) are tutorial and work with children," he said.

Volunteers meet Sundays at UCLA and carpool to Holiday Villa and Berkshire Gardens in Santa Monica.

Other retirement homes have requested the project's services, said Wong, but the group has not expanded because of problems with funding, transportation and the number of volunteers. "Our biggest problem is always recruitment," said Wong.

Volunteers usually talk with seniors, have sing-alongs, play games or work on arts and crafts, York said. This year, the group hopes to hold its second Mother's Day Fair, as well as Halloween parties.

"We want to plan activities not just for senior citizens, but things we can do together," said York.

Discussions about the upcoming presidential election are planned for the fall, and volunteers will register some of the senior citizens to vote. The volunteers also plan a letter-writing day when seniors will be able to dictate letters for relatives and friends.

"There's one lady who is blind and I write letters for her," said Wong. "It's satisfying to know that you're doing a service."

The volunteers learn to see the world through the eyes of their elderly companions, she said.

Just because they are old, "that doesn't mean their brains are dead. Life doesn't stop in a retirement home," Wong said.

Sometimes the residents come to depend on their UCLA visitors so much that they are disappointed when vacation times roll around, Wong said.

"There are some people that expect to see you every weekend. It's hard saying good-bye when summer starts . . . It's really like adopting a grandparent," she said.

The office of the Senior Citizens Project is located in 411 Kerckhoff Hall and can be reached at 825-4724.

interesting."

He also said that by using the parallel processing abilities of the Connection Machine, linguists could begin to approach their area in a manner which could lead to a rethinking of "some of the fundamental metaphors of the field."

While more traditional disciplines such as linguistics might require re-evaluation based on the new data obtained from the Connection Machine, other up-and-coming fields like artificial intelligence may be too young for such redefinition.

Researchers in artificial intelligence face the difficult task of inputting information into the computer in an attempt to have it simulate or mimic some aspect of human intelligence, said Mike Dyer, professor of computer science and director of UCLA's artificial intelligence lab, in a February interview.

Dyer said there are now two major approaches to simulating mental functions with computers. The first method, called the "synthetic approach," tries to invent artificial systems to exhibit a certain type of behavior. A second method is the "analytic approach," which starts with the

Gang gunfire claims lives, groups march to reclaim turf

By Lauren Blau
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Gang gunfire killed three people and wounded four others in weekend shootings while residents of crime-ridden neighborhoods joined Saturday in a unification march to reclaim the streets as their turf.

About 70 residents fed up with the reign of intimidation and spilled blood in their gang-infested South-Central neighborhood walked down Victoria and Brynhurst avenues between 63rd Street and Hyde Park.

"The walk that we made was simply to say to those people who want to intimidate us that we won't be intimidated," said Claudia Ghess of the South Central Organizing Committee. "They think they have possession of those streets. We want them to know we plan to take charge of those streets."

Members of that committee, the United Neighborhoods Organization and East Valley Organization are joining forces to gather 200,000 signatures for their "Sign Up, Take Charge" campaign.

Among the items on the agenda of the non-partisan campaign are crime, drugs and education.

"Some of our workers felt intimidated because they wandered into narcotics and gang territory," Ghess said. "They were followed and watched and intimidated by gang members."

Gov. George Deukmejian also joined in efforts Saturday to combat the gang problem. He signed a bill making it a crime to participate in a street gang and a felony to willfully promote or assist a gang member in any felony.

The governor also signed a bill to create a pilot "gang risk intervention" program in the county to deter young people from joining gangs.

One gang member was killed and another was wounded Saturday when bullets fired from another car riddled their vehicle in the South-Central area, said Deputy Detta Roberts of the L.A. County Sheriff's Department.

Passenger Eric Peterson, 25, was shot in the chest and killed at about 5 p.m. and another passenger Lamont Harris, 18, was shot in the left shoulder, Roberts said. Harris' condition wasn't available. The driver wasn't hurt.

Earlier, a pregnant woman and two men were wounded by pellets from shotgun blasts from a passing car, authorities said.

The expectant mother, who was not identified, was standing on a Westlake street with a group of people at 1:45 a.m. when the shots were fired, hitting the woman in the shoulder, Sgt. Richard Roach said.

The woman and the two other victims were treated at hospitals for minor gunshot wounds, he said. In the Silver Lake area, a teen-ager was shot to death following an argument Friday night among fellow gang members, Roach said.

Gerbacio Hildalgo, 22, allegedly shot Fernando Alvarez, 16, during an altercation. Then bystanders attacked Hildalgo, who was stabbed, Roach said.

Hildalgo, who was arrested, didn't appear to have life-threatening wounds, police said.

In another suspected gang shooting, a pedestrian in the South-Central area was shot in the head at 1:10 a.m. Saturday. Rodney Jones, 35, died several hours later at Martin Luther King Jr.-Drew Medical Center, Sgt. Ken Hillman said.

Meanwhile, members of two separate "sets" of the violent Crips gang showed up Saturday at Inglewood Park Cemetery to bury two fellow gang members.

"Everything went smoothly," Inglewood police Officer Mike Weimer said.

Police initially thought the funerals were for rival Crips and Bloods gang members, but subsequently discovered they were for two factions of the Crips, Sgt. Thomas Farrell said.

Tactics of LAPD surveillance task force questioned

Unit may be shooting suspects needlessly

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — A secretive L.A. Police Department unit has made fewer arrests but shot more suspects than other units, and has watched as criminals commit felonies, a newspaper reported Sunday.

In a study of records obtained in part through the California Public Records Act, the Los Angeles Times found that in 17 of 32 cases examined, special investigation detectives had apparent justification to arrest the criminals they were following before serious crimes were committed.

And the paper said there were instances in which well-armed detectives watched as victims were threatened.

"There's a separate subculture involved there, a very macho subculture," a retired high-ranking officer knowledgable in the unit's operations told the Times. "They just let situations degenerate to the point where they can use deadly force."

Since it was formed in 1965, detectives in the 19-member Special Investigations Section (SIS) have killed 23 suspects and wounded 23 others, according to police records. The Times said that was the most shootings for such a unit within the department.

The Times investigation found no instances in which innocent victims were wounded or killed by criminals during an SIS surveillance.

Monthly summaries of the squad's activities show that suspects were arrested in fewer than one-fourth of its 1987 surveillances. In 1987 the unit arrested 36 suspects, an average of less than two arrests per man, at a cost of $1 million in salaries and overtime, the Times reported.

Other officers in the 7,400-member LAPD made 75,362 felony arrests last year, the records showed.

Chief Daryl F. Gates declined to be interviewed about the special squad, but Cmdr. William Booth defended the unit.

"We're dealing with people who we have a lot of reasons to believe are involved in extreme forms of violence and so we're watching them and there's not much we can do until they violate the law," Booth said.

"We think we're protecting the public this way," he added. "We think the public agrees."

However the chairman of the Department of Justice, Law and Society at American University in Washington raised questions about the unit's tactics.

"I've never seen anything like this," said James J. Fyfe, who is also a former New York City police lieutenant. "The fundamental standard of police work is to protect life. That's not consistent with a strategy in which you let a guy rob a place and hope he doesn't kill someone."

The Times documented four cases in which the surveillance detectives were tipped to planned crimes but did not warn the potential victims and instead waited for them to occur.

And in two other cases, the detectives on surveillance made no effort to stop unsuspecting customers, one of them an 8-year-old boy, from walking into businesses that were being robbed by armed criminals.

The boy was robbed of $4 at gunpoint by three paroled members of the Aryan Brotherhood prison gang during the robbery of a Torrance florist shop. He was not hurt, but two of the robbers were killed and the third was wounded.

In another instance, a man identified by victims as the gunman in three previous robberies, was put under surveillance and watched while he and another man entered an L.A. Video shop near Koreatown.

At a preliminary hearing, SIS Det. Jerry L. Brooks testified he observed Rodney Hickman appear to kick and strike Eunsook Oh and Brian Ahn, employees of the store.

Ahn later said the thugs grabbed his wallet and watch, put a gun to his head and dragged him upstairs where they "kicked me in the face until they found the little safe."

Hickman and Allan Jewell Bradley were arrested as they fled the store with about $2,000, police said. According to police reports, when the two failed to stop as ordered, three SIS detectives fired six shotgun blasts. The men received buckshot wounds to the head. A revolver was found in Hickman's pocket, Bradley was unharmed.

Hickman was sentenced to no less than 25 years in state prison. Bradley drew a nine-year term.

"I asked the police why they didn't move in that day," Ahn told the Times recently, "and they told me that (the robbers) might have held us as hostages, which they said could have complicated things. They said they didn't have any solid evidence to stop them."

Research

brain and looks at how the neurons are interconnected.

"What people are now starting to do is build artificial neurons . . . and then they put together ensembles of them and start doing simulations," said Dyer.

While Dyer has done much research in artificial intelligence, he sees that it has obvious limitations when compared to the human brain, even though the general public seems to believe that supercomputers are more intelligent than people.

"People are ambiguous about computers. They see a computer keep track of all the checking accounts in a bank and have the entire phone book in a data base and they say 'Gee, that machine is so much smarter than us,' " he said.

"But people don't do that with other things. They don't look at the automobile and say 'Gosh, that automobile can go 100 miles per hour. It runs so much faster than me. It's superior to me.' They don't think about it like that," he explained.

Although the equipment and programs that Dyer uses may intimidate some people, they are fascinated by color images of the human brain that are produced in the lab of physiological psychologist Jackson Beatty. His images are not only intriguing, they also present a picture of the brain at work.

These images are produced through a magnetoencephalogram (MEG), a recording of the brain's magnetic fields, a counterpart to the electroencephalogram (EEG), which measures electrical waves.

Beatty said that over the years brain researchers have used whatever tools available to analyze the human brain, but since researchers obviously cannot use probing techniques on live human brains, they have been greatly hindered. Techniques such as the EEG and the MEG greatly alleviate this difficulty; of the two, the MEG has a distinct advantage.

"The skull distorts the electrical patterns observed from outside the brain. But the skull does not distort magnetic fields," Beatty said.

"From the measurement of these fields in the brain, we can determine three-dimensionally where the currents are coming from," he explained. In this way researchers are able to link structure with function, by pinpointing which parts of the brain are responsible for specific tasks.

According to Kissler, the work of Beatty and other researchers is bound to continue, especially with the help of a $750,000 gift from the W.M. Keck Foundation that will pay computer support workers and graduate students. This gift will raise the amount of money awarded to the program to a level of $4 million in just two years.

Those working on the program are extremely excited about being involved in a field of study that is in such an early period of development, Kissler said.

As for Beatty, he would like the program to go from the outer layers of the brain into those inner recesses that have proven so elusive for all these long years.

Recreation

In the Wooden Center, fitness enthusiasts furiously pedal stationary bicycles. Weight-lifters pump iron with dumb bells, free weights and universal machines in the co-ed weight room.

Some female weight trainers, however, prefer to work out at the "women-only" gym in the dance building. The Women's Gym also has stationary bicycles, lockers and showers.

Swimmers can choose between the co-ed pool at the Sunset Canyon Recreation Center and the "women-only" pool at the Dance Building or the "men-only" pool at the Men's Gym, said Wax. The Men's Gym also has lockers, showers and a sauna.

Experienced gymnasts who qualify can use the team gymnasium during informal recreation times, said Wax.

"It is important to allow people access to the facilities for their own recreation," said Nancy Rapp, director of exercise and recreational classes.

Thus, all campus facilities have informal recreation hours in addition to formal recreation periods, Rapp said.

People interested in exercising with a group or in learning a new skill may sign-up for organized instruction. Recreation classes range from aerobics and African dance to weight training and windsurfing.

The department of cultural and recreational affairs tries to introduce new classes and maintain a broad curriculum, said Rapp.

"We have a very diverse campus population and want to meet the needs of the whole community."

Recreation classes offer people the unique opportunity to shed their normal roles and interact in a new social environment. In the classes, undergraduates, graduates, staff and faculty intermingle, Rapp said. Thus, students may learn horseback riding or scuba diving side-by-side with a professor.

In some cases, undergraduates are recreation class instructors with professors as class members.

"It's good for people to get out of their roles once in a while," said Rapp.

Recreation classes allow people to learn new skills and to continue to develop them. Each major category offers instruction at beginning, intermediate and advanced levels, Rapp said. However, all recreation classes are non-credit.

UCLA also provides the opportunity to participate in organized sports. The Intramural Sports Program offers a wide-range of individual, dual and team sports in both single-sex and co-ed categories. Students, staff and faculty compete with each other in sports such as flag-football, softball, water-polo and powerlifting.

The events change quarterly, but play is always offered at all levels, said Chad Brown, coordinator of intramural sports. The program is designed for both athletic and unathletic people. Skill levels range from purely recreational to highly competitive.

"You don't have to be a star athlete to play on a team," said Brown.

Intramural sports allows people to explore athletic abilities in a unique social context, said Jess Wilson, public relations coordinator at the department of cultural and recreational affairs.

"It's a great way to find a niche at UCLA and form friendships," said Wilson.

Each league division level

See RECREATION, Page 51

plays a championship tournament. However, awards are not given, said Brown. Instead, the winning teams are recognized in the intramural sports brochure and The Daily Bruin.

Intramural sports also offers employment opportunities. The program hires more than 100 ex-varsity athletes and other experienced people for officiating positions, said Brown. The job pays a salary and allows mobility.

"We recognize a job well done," said Brown. "Numerous high schools employ our officials for part-time work. In addition, people can move into supervisor positions."

The program coordinators hope to recruit more women, staff and faculty members. Currently, fraternity, sorority and residential hall teams are the main participants.

But interested individuals can form or join independent teams. People without teams can sign-up on the "Free-Agents Board" at the cultural and recreational affairs offices.

Team schedules, instructional class schedules, enrollment information and facility hours are available quarterly at 2131 John Wooden Center. For further information call 825-3701.

Study Abroad

Living in a foreign country gives students a look at a culture as an insider. Jessica Van der Valk, who attended Sussex University in England, said she felt as if she were part of the society. She noticed that European students are more politically aware.

"My political consciousness changed," she said. "Europeans have a more interactive perception of politics . . . not just voting, interaction between the individual and society."

But any student can choose to study abroad, no matter what their major or grade point average is, through the campus Extramural Programs and Opportunities (EXPO) Center. Through the center, students can apply directly to foreign universities or work through the study abroad program of a university outside the UC system. However, college credit is not guaranteed through this program.

The center also can help find work abroad. Teaching positions are open to those going to Japan.

Through the Guadalajara Program, students spend the quarter living with Mexican families. The Spanish department will arrange the program for intermediate and advanced students. Graduate students can also do research abroad in their specialty area.

Students who participate in programs through ISOP must be in good academic standing.

Students said that studying abroad offers them a different perspective on life through learning about another culture. It also enables them to see how foreign countries view the United States.

Mark Mackenzie, who studied Spanish at the University of Madrid, found life moved at a slower pace.

Information about these programs can be obtained from the EAP department located in Haines Hall, room 28, 825-4889; the EXPO Center on the A level of Ackerman Union 825-0831, and the ISOP department located at 11250 Bunche Hall 825-4811.

Budget

the overall budget results "appalling," saying that "personal politics played into who got what."

'Zero-based budget'

Members of the budget subcommittee emphasized that last year's budgets were not considered in the 1988-1989 budgeting process. Arvizu, General Representative Lindsey Flook-Stroup, Executive Vice President Mark Harrington, Budget Review Director Henry Kerner and Facilities Commissioner Jason Weiss used a "zero-based" budgeting procedure, a format implemented in 1982, according to "The Key to Kerckhoff" handbook on student government.

Traditionally, budget subcommittees reportedly give no consideration to past allocations, and do not compare the amounts given to various groups. Before 1982, a "budget-multiplier" system was used, in which allocations were based on money spent the previous year.

The committee based its allocations on budgets submitted by each SIG and commission, and also considered each group's desire to "reach out to the entire campus community."

"Each year situations are different . . . Each year groups have different needs," Harrington explained.

Arvizu said the budget allocations were for programming, supplies, postage, advertisements, travel and telephone expenditures.

Seven dollars from students' registration fees make up the funds — $625,675 total — available to USAC for the fiscal year. With maintenance, facility costs and overhead expenses deducted, $378,185 was available for allocations to the commissions and SIGs.

"The way we look at it, it's a whole new budget, and it's a whole new year," Arvizu said. "I don't think we've done anything new (with the procedure)."

Subcommittee increases

While some council members cited USA President Mike Meehan's own 15 percent budget deduction as proof that favoritism was not involved in this year's process, others believe it was merely a ploy to cover up the other commission's increases.

Harrington denied this, saying, "Obviously, people are upset. People just can't handle the fact that other groups are receiving equal treatment."

Harrington's own budget was increased by 37 percent, and the two other commissions represented on the budget committee also received increases of 45 and 42 percent.

Harrington said he still did not receive as much money as he needed.

Increases for the executive vice president's office, Harrington explained, will be used for the USAC Chronicle, a quarterly pamphlet available to all students. The general representatives' 45 percent increase will pay for more advertisements. Both of these activities show a willingness to reach the entire student body, Harrington said.

"A lot of (the ad) money came out of the president's office . . . , and we just shifted it to the general reps," he said.

Meehan's advertising budget, however, also increased this year, with the main deduction occurring in telephone expenses.

See BUDGET, Page 53

"There was a lot of tension here last spring, and we were looking for groups to dispel a lot of the ignorance and stereotypes," Harrington said, adding that IFC and Panhellenic sponsored such an activity with rush, because it is open to all students.

"Just the fact that we're funding fraternity and sorority rush is totally indicative of where the council's priorities were," Aranovich said. SIGs should not be affected "just because a council's political inclination may change from one year to the next," she added.

Arvizu said some SIGs and commissions "presented a budget without using the guidelines that we gave them. That's going to hurt them."

Ambrose, however, maintained that there were no set guidelines to follow. He was concerned that no appeals process was included, as was in 1986 and 1987.

Harrington said that time constraints, caused by a delay in last spring's presidential election, made it difficult to include a second hearing in the process.

"My budget is the lowest . . . in the history of Academic Affairs. It's a drastic change from all the years," Aranovich said.

Budgets from 1984-1988 for the Academic Affairs Commission never reached lower than $12,000. This year, Aranovich's office received $8,503.

While Harrington pointed out that Aranovich did not even show up at her commission's budget hearing, the academic affairs commissioner said she submitted a 50-page explanation of her budget to the subcommittee. She could not attend her hearing because of family commitments, she added.

Based on uninformed questions posed to her staff members, Aranovich continued, it was obvious that the subcommittee did not read her explanation.

Aranovich requested $10,000 for a winter quarter conference on undergraduate retention. She received $315, which "won't even pay for a bus."

Alternative sources

Financial Supports Commissioner Mark Jessee cited several alternative funding boards for commissions and SIGs. Ambrose said only two of the sources are open to him, and "there is no guarantee we can get a dime of (that money)."

One council member said that because USAC has the power to allocate some of the available monies, progressive groups may feel that they must "keep in line" in order to receive the funds.

"Do we want commissions and SIGs to be forced to appease those in power?" he asked.

Harrington termed this idea "ridiculous," and acknowledged that all groups have a right to request funds. "I don't want groups to feel that their needs are not going to be met, and they have to work with the funding boards," he said.

In a letter to the Bruin, Jessee wrote that the initial budget allocations differ greatly from the amount of money groups actually receive for the year. "The budgets for SIGs and commissions varied widely from year to year between 1980-1981 and 1987-1988," he stated.

"I want to have good relations with the SIGs," Harrington said. "Just because they're upset, does that mean that student government has to bow down to them?"

to bring them off with the efficiency of the past," wrote instructor Anne Richards, a graduate student, in a prepared statement which she passed out to the instructors. She said the statement met with their approval.

Instructor Kevin Dettmar similarly said that the program was in general disarray and that the instructors received little support from program administrators this summer.

"Instructors who have taught in the programs for many years, for the most part have had their concerns for the well-being of the students and the academic component brushed aside as if they were the annoying buzzing of summer insects," according to Richards' statement.

"I apologize" for the missing checks, said Bermeo. "I was embarrassed. I understood their frustration and anger.

"There is no explanation that can justify an instructor or anyone not getting paid," he said.

The paycheck problem stemmed from the faulted structure of the programs where administrative duties are divided, Bermeo said.

"The budgetary and the personnel — in another word, the payroll issue — is really taken care of in the Gayley Center" in Westwood, in the office of College of Letters & Science Assistant Provost Juan Lara, Bermeo explained. "I think that's a mistake."

The lack of day-to-day contact with Lara's office resulted in the missing paychecks, Bermeo said.

Lara, who was on vacation at the time, said he did not yet know where the problem originated. But Bermeo should not be the only one blamed for the inand circuit breakers. According to Reed, the estimated cost of replacing the existing panels would fall between $300,000 and $350,00 including labor at approximately $3,000 to $3,500 per panel. BOC decided not to replace them because they carried no visible labels and would not give GE further "economic or moral benefits" having already been paid for.

For the time being, the Apple Credit Program, which is run by General Electric Credit Corp. and makes available instant credit to finance the same-day purchase of a computer, was also spared the boycott.

Board members seemed to feel the Apple Company might respond favorably if made aware of the situation. It was decided that a letter should be sent to Apple immediately, informing the company of the boycott and the reasons behind it.

Another untouched program was the bookstore's electronic book ordering system, for which there is no other alternative present at the available time.

According to Reed, the GE stock removed from the shelves — including light bulbs, flash cubes, batteries and other products — will be donated to charity. Replacement parts will be kept in back rooms for a limited period of time "for customers who bought these products from ASUCLA in good faith."

Boycotting General Electric has been endorsed by other student organizations including the California Alliance of Progressive Student Activists and United Campuses Against Nuclear War.

cident, he added.

Before the Aug. 31 incident, paychecks were late on another occasion. When the instructors performed preparatory work for the program in May, they did not get paid until July, Richards' statement recounted.

Lara admitted his office made an error in filing the paperwork for some instructors in May, but other instructors could not be paid then because they held other jobs in the university, he added. UCLA does not allow a person to be paid for two positions in the university at the same time, Lara explained.

The instructors also charged that no one was in the office when they needed help; no class roster lists were available at the beginning of the program; untrained staff were hired at the last minute; textbooks and other promised materials were in late; meeting rooms were unavailable; and the administrators were impatient and unapologetic about the lack of payroll information.

Bermeo said he was always in the office ready to help any staff member.

The actual source of some problems was Bermeo's decision to allow students to register for the programs until the very last day, the AAP director said. "I believe in an open-door policy to education. I believe in keeping the door open until the last possible moment."

"As an instructor myself, I can understand the frustration," the director said. "On the other hand, it happens every quarter at UCLA. Students change classes, drop classes and so on."

Lara questioned why the instructors decided to strike even after an Aug. 31 meeting with Bermeo, who promised to work on the paycheck issue immediately.

Despite the promise, the instructors decided to strike because they felt no assurance from administrators who could not adequately deal with the other problems they had in the past, Dettmar said.

Instead, the instructors filed a complaint with Ombudsman Donald Hartsock on Sept. 1.

After hearing the complaint, Hartsock said he immediately called up the payroll office to request the rush checks, but added the instructors might have been paid by Sept. 2 even without his help.

The checks were ready by 4:30 p.m. Sept. 1, Hartsock said, but not many instructors claimed them then.

Bermeo said he was "surprised and disappointed" that the teachers chose to walk out.

But Bermeo stressed that he respects the instructors' "right to make a strong statement," and that he was in no way blaming them.

However, Lara claimed certain individuals might have put concerns about personnel problems before those about students and the excellence of the program.

Several students interviewed by the Bruin at the strike said they sympathize with the teachers. If the students paid their tuition, the teachers should get their salary, they said.

Lara said he will set up a meeting with administrators of the different departments involved to discuss the mistake, and Bermeo said he will recommend to Lara that the future summer programs be centralized in Campbell Hall.

"The program will not have these logistical difficulties next year," Bermeo said. "I guarantee that."

Spikers grab No. 1 ranking in Hawaii

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

September 10, 1988 is a day that will live in infamy.

Not only for the Nebraska Cornhusker football team, but also for the defending national champions in women's volleyball, the University of Hawaii Rainbow Wahines.

It was on this day that the UCLA women's volleyball team led its assault against the No. 1 and No. 2-ranked teams in the nation. . .the University of Illinois and Hawaii, respectively.

And, surprisingly, the then-fifth-ranked Bruins left the island members from the 1987 squad.

The Illini fell prey to the guns of Shaver, who blasted 21 kills for a .341 percentage. The sophomore outside hitter, who is also one of the better defensive players on the team, also scored 18 digs for UCLA. Support came from freshman outside-hitter-turned-middle-blocker Elaine Youngs, who racked up six block assists and four service aces. "Wall" Tomkus roofed the Illini five times and scored 12 digs defensively.

In addition to the big wins in the Pacific, the Bruins registered early-September wins over Pepperdine and San Diego State.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

of Oahu with two major upsets and the title of No. 1 team in the nation.

The surprise attack against the once all-powerful Hawaiian team was led by outside hitter Samantha Shaver, a 5-9 sophomore who gained all-freshman team honors last season. Shaver scored 17 kills, two service aces and 14 digs. Air support came from 6-1 middle blocker Daiva Tomkus, whose outstanding blocking ought to merit her the nickname "The Wall."

Tomkus, a junior All-American recorded nine block assists and one block solo in addition to her 14 offensive kills.

The Bruins were outperformed by the Rainbow Wahines in game one, 14-16. However, after a court switch, the Bruins came storming out, sweeping the next three games 15-11, 15-7, and 15-0 — the first recorded shut out of the year. Hawaii was held to a hitting percentage of .108 and was outblocked by the Bruins 15-8.

Illinois, the highly-touted No. 1-ranked team, fell to the high-flying Bruins in five games 15-11, 13-15, 18-16, 8-15, and 15-2. Illinois' pre-season ranking was based heavily on the fact that they return all six starting

The string of victories answers a number of questions for Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski, whose team has acquired a new look in 1988. With two freshmen in the starting line-up, Banachowski — in his 22nd year— had high hopes but many misgivings going into the season.

His worries: Could the freshman perform in NCAA competition? Can the team learn to play together? Will the team gain a killer instinct with only one senior in the line-up? Will the depth on the bench be reliable in the face of injuries?

After four victories, the answers are a resounding yes. . .yes. . .yes. . .and yes.

Not only were the freshmen competitive in NCAA play, they dominated their opponents. Starters Youngs and Jenny Evans' court poise are equal to that of playoff veterans. Evans equaled the team high of 13 digs in the first match of the year against San Diego State. Currently, the outside hitter ranks fourth on the team in digs behind Tomkus, Shaver, and Youngs.

Youngs, a middle blocker, is the picture perfect example of

Bruins find Seoul-mates at Games

By David Gibson and Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editors

Amid the thousands and thousands of athletes milling around the Olympic Village in Seoul this week representing the hundred-plus nations in the world's greatest athletic event, 32 of them will have a special bond.

Those 32 come from countries as varied as Italy, Mexico, Denmark and the United States.

And even though they may wear the sweatsuits of different nations, those 32 share a bond that is shared also by 22,000 undergraduate students and 10,000 graduate students in Westwood, California a half a world away.

Those 32 milling around in Seoul are, of course, Bruins.

In sports ranging from gymnastics to track and field, from soccer to volleyball, 32 current or former UCLA athletes will compete in the 1988 Summer Olympic Games in Seoul.

While some have already competed and some have yet to have compete, all have enjoyed or are enjoying brilliant careers as Bruins.

A look at UCLA's Olympians:

TRACK AND FIELD

Hands down this is UCLA's most represented event. Eight past Bruins and six current or just-graduated Bruins have earned a spot on this year's Olympic roster.

The most well-known Bruin female athletes on the squad are the three hyphens: Florence Griffith-Joyner, her sister-in-law Jackie Joyner-Kersee, and Gail Devers-Roberts. For the men, Danny Everett, Steve Lewis, Kevin Young, Willie Banks and Andre Phillips are all predicted medalists.

What is astonishing is that likely another four would have made the squad if they could have avoided injuries. Jeanette Bolden, who won a gold medal in the 1984 games as a member of the 400 meter relay, ruptured her Achilles tendon in the trials. Mike Tully, a silver medalist at the 84 games, is recovering from calf probe surgery and had to withdraw in the Trials because of tightness. Greg Foster, winner of the 1983 and 1987 World Championships in the 110m hurdles, and favorite in the event, shattered his forearm while practicing before the trials while discus thrower John Brenner suffered a injury while training in the UCLA weight room.

MEN'S TRACK AND FIELD

Willie Banks (USA)

Could this be the last hurrah for the greatest triple jumper ever? Even though Banks holds the world record at 58-11 1/2, he has a history of falling apart in the big meets. As a favorite in the Los Angeles Games, Banks finished a distant sixth, and did not make the finals in the World Championships last year. But then in the trials he exploded for a pair of wind-aided 59 footers. Because of his big meet failure, Track and Field News predicts that Banks will once again be eluded of the gold and take the silver, despite having a better year and career than his competition.

DAILY BRUIN FILE PHOTO

UCLA alum Jackie Joyner-Kersee, considered by many the world's greatest female athlete, will search for gold in the heptathlon and long jump.

Danny Everett (USA)

Everett has followed the tradition of great quarter-milers at UCLA. Only 21 years old, he has emerged as the third best 400 Meter runner ever behind Butch Reynolds and Lee Evans. He won the NCAA's this past season as a junior. Despite battling a cold, he still managed to take second to Reynolds in a record-setting race in Italy with a time of 44.20. He has run a 43.98 for the second best low-altitude time ever. Many track experts such as Track and Field News question whether the long collegiate season will take its toll on Everett and other UCLA runners such as Kevin Young, Steve Lewis and Gail Devers Roberts. But UCLA head coach Bob Larsen disagrees, stating that he and sprint coach John Smith had his stars running in "non-ego" and "low-key" races such as the 800 meters. Look for a healthy Everett to challenge a confident Reynolds to the tape. He should also medal in the 4 X 400 relay which should shatter the world record, but Everett won't likely see action on the relay until the finals..

Steve Lewis (USA)

Lewis is the youngest male on the American team at 19 years old. He shocked the nation by posting a 44.11 time at sea-level for the third-best time ever. Larsen believes that Lewis will probably have the toughest time adjusting to the extended schedule. He just might end up being the best of the big three (Reynolds, Everett, and himself) after he matures and reaches his athletic peak in a few years. Lewis holds the top four Junior records in the event. He, too, will also run a leg on the winning mile relay, but probably will be rested until the finals.

Mike Marsh (USA)

Marsh should see action in at least the qualifying rounds of the 4 X 100 meter relay. He may make the final spot behind Carl Lewis, Calvin Smith, and Dennis Mitchell after a run-off with the three other alternates. Marsh has had a tremendously consistent summer in Europe, according to Larsen. He will be a senior in the upcoming track season. Marsh ran a wind-aided 9.96 in taking sixth at the trials. His best official time is 10.12, a UCLA record. This squad has a chance of breaking the world record time of 38.83 set in LA in 1984, but it will depend on the exchanges.

Andre Phillips (USA)

Phillips is one of the best 400 meter hurdlers ever, but has lived in the shadow of Edwin Moses for the past six years. Phillips graduated in 1981 with two Pac-10 and one national intermediate hurdle championships under his belt. He has also served as a coach on the Bruin staff. Larsen says his chances are very good and that he is a "tremendous athlete and a great competitor." Phillips' best time in the event is 47.51 which he ran in 1986. He has, however, never beaten Moses.

No. 1 polo squad looks to end the drought

In 1988, Horn's Bruins a good bet to go all the way

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

With all eyes turned towards the Bruins of the gridiron this fall, another group on campus merits its share of respect as well — the UCLA water polo team.

The Bruin poloists are currently ranked No. 1 in the nation and will be attempting to win their first NCAA crown since the dynasty squads of the early seventies.

A quick check of recent UCLA water polo seasons exhibits inconsistent teams which always came close but could never quite reach their ultimate goals. The 1987 season is a case in point. The Bruins were able to defeat every team they faced — including eventual national champ California — except their nemesis USC. The Trojans defeated UCLA four times, with each match embroiled in controversy and three of the contests being decided in overtime. The Bruins finished fourth behind Cal, USC and UC Irvine at last year's NCAA tournament.

But 1988 should be a different story.

UCLA head coach Bob Horn enters into his 26th year as coach of the Bruins with more than simple optimism; Horn has six of seven starters back from last year along with many impressive newcomers and, for the first time in recent history, a strong bench.

Heading up the squad is senior Fernando Carsalade. Carsalade, who represented his native Brazil in the 1984 Olympic Games, is determined to add a national title to his already impressive list of accomplishments, which include being named NCAA tourney MVP in 1986. He is also regarded as the best defensive player in collegiate water polo and is ranked among the best players ever at UCLA.

To be sure, though, despite Carsalade's prowess, the Bruins are a balanced team with no apparent weaknesses. On the offensive side, senior Hank Peterson and junior Alex Rousseau will handle most of the duties in the hole and should provide most of the scoring. Last season, Rousseau set a new single season scoring record at UCLA and has an excellent shot at becoming the all-time scoring leader as well.

Peterson, who redshirted last season, has shown in summer competition the ability to dominate a contest single handily.

Senior Jeff Moore and junior Mark Maretzki possess the best speed on the team along with shooting accuracy and will be leading the Bruin counterattack along with all-around stand-out junior Marcelo Carsalade.

In goal will be senior Mike Vanderwaerdt, who is returning after his first injury-free year. Vanderwaerdt was inconsistent at times last year but showed the ability to make the big save in the clutch and has the experience needed to be one of the country's top goaltender.

LAURA JELLIFFE

Marcelo Carslade is just another weapon in Coach Bob Horn's loaded 1988 water polo team.

Rounding out the squad is a formidable bench led by senior Scott Leonard (who is recovering from off-season surgery), junior Vince Herron, and sophomore Javier Escobar, whose outside shot is one of the strongest on the team. Other players who are sure to contribute are Pepperdine transfer Pero Asic, along with senior Marco Rago, juniors Donn Yamada, Kurt Fry, Blake Krikorian and Steve Granick, and sophomore David Jordan.

This year's team also appears to be strong as a result an impressive crop of recruits from around the globe. Freshman Jason Belanger from Newport Harbor High School should make a contribution as a driver while fellow freshmen Philip Hadfield of New Zealand and Mike Wilmink of Canada will help out with the hole duties.

In winding up summer tournament play, the Bruins saved their best for last, as they won the U.S. Outdoor Club Championships in late July. In that competition, UCLA won five and tied one en route to becoming the first collegiate team ever to win the tourney.

As expected, the Bruins started off the year in fine style, as they hammered their way through the Pepperdine tournament on September 10 and 11, winning games in outrageous fashion. The Bruins flexed their muscles in a 27-4 win over Loyola Marymount, a 21-2 win over Cal State Los Angeles, a 15-6 win over Navy and a 15-6 win over Pepperdine. And that was without Fernando Carsalade and Asic, who missed the tourney due to injury.

In the Irvine tournament held September 16 and 17, UCLA won again, this time over some better competition. The Bruins edged Cal, 8-7 to win the tournament and establish themselves over a team that is generally considered to be the next-best team in the nation.

The primary competition facing UCLA should come once again from the Bears and USC, who will both return top starters. UC Irvine and CS Long Beach will also challenge for the national title. Stanford should not be counted out, but they appear to be going through a rebuilding year.

UCLA's first home game will be during the Bruin Invitational at Sunset Rec on October 9, but they will be playing on the road against USC on October 8.

Bruin soccer gets off to a shaky start

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

With the six-game 'pre-league' schedule completed, the UCLA Soccer squad (3-3) is primed for the games that will really count towards a play-off berth.

For those of you who forgot, the Bruins compete as an independent in the Far West Region. Therefore, the matches against other top squads on the coast can't be termed league contests. But that's just a matter of semantics to Bruin Coach Sigi Schmid.

"As an independent, our game with Santa Clara (on Sept. 20) is the first league game, where we'll see how we do with the contenders."

The Far West pre-season polls don't quite put the Bruins in contender status, ranking them seventh following three losses to intra-sectional opponents.

"I don't put much credence in those regional polls," stated Schmid, who incidentally is the National Rankings Chairman. "Our losses to the number one (Indiana), number two (Virginia) and fourteenth (Evansville) teams in the nation affected our ranking rather unjustly."

"That's a pretty tough opening schedule, but as a coach, the rankings can be the biggest favor early in the season."

UCLA's season opened in the same Indiana Stadium where the movie Breaking Away was filmed, yet it was the Evansville Aces who broke away from a 1-0 halftime deficit for a 3-1 victory. Freshman Aaron Muth got the first goal of the season, but the physical play of Evansville took its toll in the second period.

Playing without several veteran players due to injury and summer school commitments, a young Bruin eleven was beat to the ball continually by the Aces, who seemed intent on playing a game of intimidation. The strategy worked.

However, going up against the top-ranked Hoosiers in front of a boisterous Bloomington crowd 24 hours later, UCLA did not let itself fall to the intimidation game. Though the result was another loss, the Bruins were far more competitive.

Ken Snow, earning quite a reputation as a Bruin-buster with his second two-goal game versus UCLA in as many seasons in a Hoosier uniform, paced Indiana to a hard-fought 2-1 victory.

Snow scored his first goal only 5:37 in on a mishandled crossball, then proceeded to disappear for the better part of the next seventy minutes. In that time, UCLA peppered Jergun Somner in the IU goal with a flurry of shots untrue to their mark.

Then, from out of nowhere, Snow took a Hans Roost feed and lofted it over Bruin keeper Anton Nistl for his thirteenth career multiple goal game and fourth goal in this, his sophomore season.

Ray Fernandez quieted the partisan celebration with a goal at 83:37 to halve the Hoosier advantage, yet Indiana ran out the clock for the title of their own addidas-Met Life Soccer Classic.

Both UCLA coach Schmid and IU mentor Jerry Yeagley turned to the pages of history in their respective post-game analyses.

"This is reminiscent of last year's Yale-UConn pair of games where we followed a dismal performance with a strong one, yet we lost both games," reflected Schmid.

Yeagley cast a bright light on the path of the Bruins, "I remember when Clemson lost both games (in this tournament) and won the NCAA title. I don't think UCLA is going to drop off- we'll see a lot from them."

The schedule next saw the Bruins on the tournament trail once again, this time in Las Vegas where they earned their first victory of the season.

"Virginia was the best team we saw," surmised Schmid, "we played well there but lost 3-0 on mistakes."

"UConn was a real mental test, playing without Steve Black and Dana Keir (out with injuries again), but we eaked out a 1-0 victory. Call it winning ugly."

After compiling a 1-3 road record, the Bruins returned home

Coach Larsen eyes another NCAA crown

By David Gibson
Assistant Sports Editor

What do most coaches do after locking up their second consecutive NCAA Track and Field Championship? Enjoy the summer, take a vacation, go on a few talk shows. . .but what if you're Bob Larsen, who just happens to be the head coach of UCLA track and field team as well as the head coach of the UCLA cross country team?

Larsen had no time for a vacation or celebration — he had other things on his mind, such as getting his athletes into shape for another upcoming season. And that is just what he did.

This year, the Bruin men's cross country team — a team that placed fifth in the Pac-10 and eighth in the NCAA District VIII last year — returns four of its top six runners. Larsen is also back for his tenth season at the helm with hopes of building to his cross country dynasty.

Before Larsen took the reins in 1979, UCLA had only placed as high as third (1971) in the Pac-10 once and had never qualified for the NCAAs. But since Larsen's era began, the Bruins have finished no lower than third in the Pac-10 seven times and have qualified for the NCAA on six occasions.

It is no wonder that, because of his success, Larsen has been named NCAA Cross Country Coach of The Year in 1981 and 1980 Pac-10 Coach of The Year. And even though Larsen has won two consecutive Pac-10 and NCAA championships in track and field, he still insists that he is better known on a national level for his success as a cross country coach. He has carried his tradition of strong cross country teams from his coaching days at Grossmont Community College to UCLA.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Jim Ortiz concludes his winning effort at the UCLA Invitational on Sept. 11 to open the UCLA cross country season.

But after his teams dominated his first seven seasons in Westwood, his numbers have tailed off the past couple of years and his team has not advanced to the NCAA's.

What will UCLA do in cross country this year? Is it possible to advance back to the NCAA's once again?

When asked such questions, Larsen didn't hesitate in saying, "We hope to make it to the NC's as a team this year. That would be our goal.

"I think there will be a lot of teams that will be pretty close this year," he said. "But it's too early to predict where we are going to rank."

The top Bruin runners this year will be juniors Victor Santamaria, Beat Ammann and Mark Dani and senior Jim Ortiz.

Last year, Santamaria placed 15th in the conference and seventh in the District VIII meet. Ammann concluded his season as 19th best in the Pac-10 and 41st at the District VIII meet. Dani ran for Grossmont Community College last season and was the California State champ. Ortiz was a redshirt last year, but Larsen feels that "he will be a very strong factor on this team."

Also coming back from last years squad are Joe Nitti, Sergio O'Cadiz and Mike Wangler.

The Bruins kicked off the season the right way at the UCLA All-Comers Meet which was held on campus September 11. Ortiz led the blue and gold attack as he took first place in the non-scoring meet.

"Ortiz won and looked good," said Larsen. "We used it (the opener) as a tune-up for some of the guys who needed to race."

Other Bruins who fared well were Ammann, who took 10th, redshirt freshman Jeff Wood, who finished 14th, another redshirt freshman in Shawn Noonan, who took 18th, and Christian Cushing-Murray, who finished 20th.

Nitti, who was not in the race, has had some leg problems and Larsen said that it would take a while for him to come back.

Larsen has very high hopes for Dani, who, last year at the state championships, set the cross country course record en route to victory.

"He'll be a significant part of our cross country and track teams," said Larsen of Dani. "He was one of the best prep distance runners in high school as he ran a 8:46 two-mile indoor and 14:07 in the 5000 meters."

But Larsen knows he will need more than a junior college transfer to advance past the competitive District VIII, and back into the NCAA's.

"We are obviously going to be very dependent on our top three," stated Larsen. "We have to get Joe Nitti back in there and we have to have a couple of our redshirt freshman to have big improvements. Then we can be competitive."

Daily Bruin likes UCLA, USC in Pac-10 race

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

Going into the annual showdown with Southern Cal last year, UCLA seemed on the verge of its fourth Rose Bowl in the 1980's, behind an explosive running game fueled by Gaston Green and a stunning aerial attack choreographed by quarterback Troy Aikman.

But Erik Affholter's sprawling, twisting grab of a 32-yard Rodney Peete pass sent UCLA Rose Bowl hopes up in smoke. The disappointed Bruins went to the Aloha Bowl, and half-heartedly defeated Florida 20-16.

However, the hopes in Westwood are once again high, — particularly after the 41-28 shellacking of No. 2 Nebraska — as highly-touted Aikman returns, looking to lead the Bruins to the Pac-10 title and quite possibly the national championship.

Aikman, easily the top returning quarterback in the nation, was a second team All-American last season. Despite playing only twelve games as a Bruin before this year, Aikman ranks third on several all-time passing lists at UCLA.

Last season, Aikman threw for 2,527 yards and 17 touchdowns on a team that had Heisman candidate Green as its main offensive weapon. Not only is Aikman the top candidate for this year's Heisman Trophy, pro scouts are drooling over the 6-3 signal-caller, who most likely would have been the No. 1 pick in last year's NFL draft.

When Larry Smith took the reins from sad-sack Ted Tollner last year, many predicted a tough year for the Trojans. After all, under the much-maligned Tollner, USC lost its last three games of the 1986 season, including a heartbreaking 38-37 loss to Notre Dame at home in Coliseum, after which the Trojan faithful booed Tollner as he tried to introduce the team's seniors.

Smith, however, heard nothing but cheers as he led Trojans to an 8-4 record, the conference co-championship and the Rose Bowl, while grabbing Pac-10 Coach of the Year honors for himself. This year, with Heisman Trophy candidate Rodney Peete leading the way, some people are talking of bigger things to come.

The offense, led by Peete, should once again be top-notch, with eight starters returning from the Rose Bowl squad.

Peete, who led Troy to a 17-13 stunner over UCLA to grab the Rose Bowl berth for 'SC, is a leading candidate for the award given to the nation's top collegiate player.

Peete, who also plays third base for the Trojan baseball team, is the most prolific passer in Southern California's illustrious football history, and had outstanding numbers last year. He threw for 2,709 yards and 21 touchdowns, and threw for 304 yards and two touchdowns against UCLA.

However, the Trojans will

Since their last conference championship in 1981, the closest the "James Gang" has been to the Roses has been a Seattle flower shop.

Hopes are high, however, that in this landmark season for veteran head coach Don James — three more conference victories will put him ahead of USC's John McKay as the conference's winningest coach — the Huskies will return to Pasadena and the Rose Bowl.

However, before the Husky hopeful make any New Year's travel plans, James and his staff must answer some questions. Although the Huskies return 15 starters from last year's 7-4-1 team that defeated Tulane in the Independence Bowl, including pre-season All-American offensive lineman Mike Zandowsky, the Huskies are looking at some big holes at several positions: most notably quarterback, receiver and linebacker.

The success of the passing game will rest on the shoulders of junior quarterback Cary Conklin, who inherits the signal-calling from graduated Chris

So there are question marks.

There are question marks surrounding a very young defense. There are question marks surrounding two somewhat inconsistent quarterbacks. And there are question marks about the ability of the Arizona Wildcats to bounce back from an intensely mediocre 4-4-3 season in Dick Tomey's first year at the helm.

But when you start talking schedules, replace any question marks with an emphatic exclamation point.

Because in 1988, the Cats play eight of their 11 games in the noisy and friendly confines of Arizona Stadium. That includes six conference games in their own den.

Having already traveled to and beaten Oregon State, the Cats have only one more conference road game left. If you're a Cat fan, you know the power of the rabid desert fans at home. And you have to like those odds.

Which is why most are expecting Arizona to be a near-cinch for a post-season bowl and to finish in the upper echelon of a very competitive Pac-10 race this year.

The Cats are 2-1 in the early going, having beaten perennial conference patsy Oregon State 24-13 in Corvallis and non-conference foe Texas Tech 35-19 before suffering an expected loss

Can this be the season that the California Golden Bears climb out of the lower half of the Pac-10 division into bowl contention? Can Troy Taylor, who is the second best quarterback named Troy in the country, put up the kind of numbers that is expected of him? Or will another promising group of Cal talent jump off to a fast start but then stall at the midway point and then plummet down to reality, and quite possibly the cellar of the competitive division?

All these questions and more are lingering in the minds of Cal's coaches and players at the beginning of what looks like to be a promising season.

But this is Cal. The Golden Bears. The same Bear squad that hasn't been in a bowl game since it appeared in the prestigious Garden State Bowl in 1979, and hasn't won one since 1938 when it took the Rose Bowl. Which makes this year the 50th anniversary of Cal's last ride to glory.

But this Cal squad has something different about itself. Something the Bay Area hasn't seen in a college football team in quite some time. Confidence.

With twenty returning starters,

When last season got underway, there were two things that Arizona State fans could say to the rest of the Pac-10 conference. One: For the first time ever they were Rose Bowl champions after defeating Michigan 22-15. And two: John Cooper was their head coach.

They can say neither this year.

Things have changed in Tempe in a year, as ASU's record dropped from 10-1 in 1986 to 7-4-1 last year. But that mark was still good enough to get them into the not-so-prestigious Freedom Bowl, where they played a not-so-prestigious Air Force team to the gun in a close 33-28 win.

But even though the Devils won the game, they lost

Who the heck knows what to expect out of Stanford this fall?

Before the season started, it was generally assumed that Stanford — short on talent at the skill positions and coming off of a disappointing 5-6 season — would be in for a long, rough season.

And opening against the highly-touted USC Trojans didn't make life a whole lot easier for wily old head coach Jack Elway and his players.

So how, then, do you figure that Stanford came within one

If last year's wacky Pac-10 season proved one thing to football fans, it was the re-emergence of football at the University of Oregon. Last year Oregon surprised the conference with major upsets over Washington and Southern Cal to climb to the top of the division along with UCLA.

People were talking about what looked like Oregon's first bowl appearance in 25 years, and some northern noses even smelled roses. But with tradition in its favor, Oregon dropped its next three games and, in the process, fell to a tie for fourth in the division.

Overall, the Ducks finished at 6-5, with a 4-4 record in the Pac-10. Not bad considering they threw a green quarterback to the wolves. But up in the Pacific Northwest, green is a popular color. Which boded well for head coach Rich Brooks when he turned the signal-calling duties over to a freshman quarterback named Bill Musgrave.

By season's end, Musgrave had emerged as one of the top freshmen in the country as he finished his rookie campaign third in the conference in passing efficiency and 13th nationally. Overall, he completed 139 of

I applied some Clearasil Cover-Up to a particularly unsightly blemish on my forehead, admired the razor-sharp creases in my chinos, smoothed my sky-blue cardigan and winked into the mirror. "Fight! Fight! Fight!" I said softly, pumping a fist over my head.

It was the registration week preceding fall quarter of my freshman year, and I was drunk with school spirit and the novelty of the college experience. I was preparing for my first solo stroll around campus (the gait for which — a one-hand-in-pocket, one-swinging-casually swagger — I had been practicing since high school graduation), and I was feeling great.

In 1985, even sunny Los Angeles had come under fall's cool, colorful spell. As I left my new dorm room, a brisk autumnal breeze raised the hairs on the back of my neck. I pulled my propellered beanie down snugly, deeply worried about the damage it was doing to my carefully-waxed flattop, and headed toward Bruin Walk.

The heels of my saddle shoes made a happy clicking noise, as I thrilled to the sights of Pauley Pavilion, the proud Bruin statue and countless fresh-faced co-eds. Advancing through Westwood Plaza, I spotted a mass of students gathered around a Daily Bruin kiosk. I cleared my throat and squeezed my way through the crowd, eager to discover what the excitement was all about.

"Hey, Bruins," I called enthusiastically, "what seems to be the problem?"

"Look!" exclaimed a pony-tailed freshwoman, pointing at the kiosk.

Stapled to the fiberboard was a flyer from the UCLA Blood Donor Center that featured a black-and-white photograph of UCLA head football coach Terry Donahue. Flanked by a pair of busty candystripers, T.D. was reclining in a chaise lounge, sipping what appeared to be a Pina Colada. He seemed to be completely oblivious to the thick, dark tube that slithered from his arm to some mysterious point outside the frame. Beneath the picture, in large block lettering, was the simple statement, "Coach Donahue says: Beat USC, in both the annual showdown and the annual blood drive competition."

My heart raced wildly. "Here's my big chance to prove my love for UCLA," I thought excitedly, pushing my way out of the group. "Even though I didn't make the chess team, I can still defend the school's honor in some way."

I skipped down to the Medical Center, tripped down three flights of stairs, and found myself in the middle of a crowded corridor. Families were picnicking on the cold linoleum floor, some folks were tossing pigskins around under the harsh fluorescent lights, and fraternity brothers drank beer and sang the praises of the mighty Bruins. A white-coated doctor would occasionally fight his way through the droves, excusing himself, stopping now and again to shake hands with a powerful-looking alumnus.

A red line painted along the floor directed me toward the Blood Donor Center, and I followed it closely and quickly. As I hurried heel-toe-heel-toe down the line, the crowd parted before me, slapped me on the back, wished me luck, and offered me fruit juice and cookies. I accepted the food and smiled at all my well-wishers. It was not really clear why these people were so happy to see me, but I continued toward the Center.

A dozen perky cheerleaders shook their pompons and shrieked words of encouragement as I slipped into the reception area of the Center. After answering a number of embarrassing questions and lying about my age and weight, I was rushed by a team of RN's to an orange vinyl chair that had but one arm.

The USC marching band, fully costumed in gaudy Trojan soldier uniforms, was circling a chair at the other end of the room, playing a slow version of "Conquest" over a corpse wearing a UCLA sweatshirt. A large scoreboard above the deceased showed, "USC, 1283 pts., UCLA, 1278 pts." I settled back in my chair and held my breath.

A man in a lab coat approached me, introduced himself and pulled what I was certain was a meat thermometer from his breast pocket. "We're down five pints, kid," he said gravely, "you're our last hope."

I scanned the crowd nervously. Standing in the doorway was the pony-tailed girl from the kiosk. She had tears in her eyes as she mouthed, "I love you, Matt," and waved feebly.

The technician patted me on the shoulder, raised the needle over his head, and plunged it into my vein. I grew dizzy as I watched the huge, five-pint bloodbag fatten.

A crew of cheerleaders performed the human pyramid stunt in front of my chair, while a guy in a bear suit did a pushup for every ounce I gave. I pumped my fist, furiously trying to increase the pressure and the amount of blood that was flowing from my arm.

The scoreboard indicated that we were within a pint of overtaking USC, but I was rapidly losing consciousness, and the blood was now only trickling out.

Suddenly, a Bruin Belle ran up beside me and forced a cupcake and a couple quarts of Gatorade into my dry mouth. I mustered all my strength and swallowed. The blood began flowing again.

The crowd went berserk as the scoreboard showed that I had given more than five pints and thus pushed UCLA to victory. Chancellor Young, a bit misty eyed, climbed atop an operating table to thank the crowd and me for the great win.

As the chancellor was speaking, I realized that I was still connected to the bag. I tried to speak, but my weak voice was lost amid the deafening applause. I felt a strange rumble a half a second or so before the bag exploded.

Now, three years later, as I think back on that gory scene — cheerleaders, alumni, students, mascots, administrators and blood center volunteers covered with my blood, but all smiles, eight-claps and spell-outs nonetheless — I see that it was all a grand metaphor for what it takes to be a true UCLA fan. Let these last three years of liquid diets, struggling to get my weight back up over the century mark and two losses to USC in the Big Game serve as a lesson for the new generation of Bruins.

Cross country's depth key to season

By David Gibson
Assistant Sports Editor

After a long summer of lifting, running and getting into shape, the UCLA women's cross country team is now on the path to what looks to be a promising year.

Head coach Bob Messina returns once again at the helm in quest of reaching the nationals.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Kim Stewart cools down after finishing as the top UCLA runner at the UCLA Invitational held two weeks ago.

After a just-miss season in 1987, Messina has his eyes set on finding a star to lead his squad on the trail of the championships.

"We're a deeper squad this year," said Messina. "We've got ten to twelve people up front who can run with anyone's varsity team in the country.

"Physically, I think were in top shape. I am pleased how many people came into the season in good shape."

UCLA showed its depth in its season opener at home in the UCLA Invitational on Sept. 11 as it placed 16 runners in front of Arizona's seventh runner. What was also encouraging for the blue and gold was that every single Bruin runner who competed showed an improvement over last year's opener.

Leading the attack in the 3,000 meter race was senior Kim Stewart, who finished third overall, posting a time of 17:42. Last year, Stewart was a redshirt, and Messina believes it was her best race ever as a Bruin.

"Kim did a real nice job and is learning to run up front where she belongs," he said.

Besides Stewart, Messina is also pleased with the development of Debbie Williams, who opened up her final year in a Bruin uniform by placing sixth overall. She was the second fastest Bruin on the day as she clocked in at 18:04. Last year Williams finished 16th in the District VIII meet and 22nd in the Pac-10's, and Messina is excited about her potential for stardom this season.

"Debbie has been a success story who has been real fun to watch," he said.

Another runner that Messina will count on heavily will be sophomore Melissa Sutton. As a freshman, she ended the cross country season as one of the top UCLA runners as she finished eighth at the Pac-10 meet and tenth in the District VIII meet. At Newbury Park High, she was a three-time CIF cross country champ and twice named to the Bonnie Bell cross country All-America team.

In the Invitational, Sutton finished 11th overall and fourth on the Bruin team as she crossed the tape at 18:16, an improvement over her time in the race last year of 18:33. Sutton is another one who Messina believes can lead his squad to the nationals.

Another returning force is junior Laurie Chapman. Along with Sutton last fall, Chapman was continuously in the front of the Bruin pack, and the same will be counted on this year. Although Chapman has been bothered by an ankle injury which kept her out of the opener, Messina is confident she can go on to have a tremendous season.

Last year Chapman just missed advancing to nationals as she took seventh in the Pac-10 meet and 11th place at the District VIII meet. Chapman hopes to regain her form of her freshman year at UCLA where she finished second in the Pac-10 and fourth in the district and advanced to nationals and placed forty-first.

Another third year returnee who has demonstrated her ability to lead the pack is Laura Chapel, who is coming off a successful track and field season where she advanced to the national championships and took ninth overall. In last year's cross country season, she placed 15th at the Pac-10 meet and 27th at the District VIII meet.

Messina also stated that he is pleased with his balanced combination of young freshman and seasoned veterans. On the squad he has nine seniors and eight rookies. A couple of freshman who have already made an impact are Jennifer Ashe out of Leland High in San Jose and Kristi Bache out of University High in San Diego. Bache opened her Bruin career with a 10th place finish in the opener and was the third on the Bruin squad as she finished at 18:16.

Ashe finished 18th overall at the Invitational and, according to Messina, is coming along slowly.

"Jen (Ashe) has had knee trouble and has started slow," explained Messina. "Despite that fact, she's right there fighting for a varsity position. I like her style and approach to running."

"I've got two freshman who I think will be in the top seven this year," predicted the Bruin head coach.

But to balance his young raw talent, Messina likes his veterans. "One of the best qualities about this team is the maturity. I've got great leadership in C'za Azcueta and Pam Thompson, who are the team captains.

"I'm really pleased with the group of runners I've got," he said. "Our seniors have offered great leadership, but my theme all year long will be that I've got to have a couple of stars."

Club sports ready for another big year

By Patti Wagonhurst

Coordinators and members of the University Recreation Association (URA) are in on one of UCLA's best kept secrets: the Association and its 31 sport and recreation club teams.

URA provides an assortment of club teams, from sailing to radio to rugby. And these teams are open to everyone at UCLA, including faculty and staff.

"All it takes is an interest," said Rich Clakeley, assistant coordinator of the Recreation Association.

The club teams balance competition, fun and responsibility in their programs, said Clakeley. For those who are serious about their sport, most of the teams belong to a conference, and participate in intercollegiate competition. The cycling team, which currently has about 100 members, belongs to the Western Collegiate Cycling Conference, and has three races per weekend and championships at the end of their season. Other members of the clubs do not compete, but reap the purely social benefits of being a member of a club team.

Members are "here to enjoy the sports and meet friends," said Jess Wilson, promotions coordinator of the Association.

A promotions coordinator, a new position in the Recreation Association, Wilson hopes to let the secret out. By direct contact with the departments and more campus media coverage, Wilson hopes to "make the campus aware of what our activities are and how to get involved."

What makes the club teams different from other intercollegiate sport teams is that they are run by the students, in accordance with the Association guidelines. The students schedule their own meetings, practices, and social events, and raise funds themselves.

"It is an excellent opportunity to learn some really valuable skills in organization and administration," said Wilson.

One of the most recently organized teams is the Ultimate Frisbee team. Ultimate Frisbee, a team sport that resembles football but is played with a Frisbee, started around 1972 on the East Coast, and has since caught on big on the West Coast, said Bob Felderman, captain of the team. Stanford has two teams and a lot of members.

The UCLA Ultimate Frisbee team currently has 15 members, mostly graduate students. Felderman said he is hoping to get more people interested.

"There is a lot of camaraderie, and a lot of fun," said Felderman.

The Ultimate Frisbee team competes in tournaments about once a month, with non-collegiate teams and collegiate teams all the way from San Luis Obispo to San Diego. Last spring, in a college tournament, the team took third place.

Ultimate Frisbee and the other 30 club teams are partially funded by the University, said Williams. The University Recreation Association supplies league fees, officials fees, and limited equipment, and the teams hold fund raisers and charge club dues to cover additional costs.

The sport and recreation club teams are ready for membership. A list of the clubs offered this fall, and more information on joining or starting a club team can be found in the John Wooden Center on the second floor, or call 825-3701.

IM Sports gearing up in 1988

By Jess Wilson

Let's see, when was it we last won the Rose Bowl? Oh yeah, '85, my freshman year; I remember it well. Seemed like we won every Saturday. And after the party-bus joyride from Pasadena, we couldn't wait to brandish my tattered, hand-me-down pigskin and replay every Iowa fumble and Bruin touchdown.

Yeah, freshman year reminded me of Nerf football and Nerf-Hoop when I was ten. So did our husking of Nebraska two weeks ago. And after Aikman's 69-yard touchdown bomb to Keating against Long Beach, I threw the same pass to my roommate in front of our apartment--well..., almost. So after we swamp Washington and Oregon State, I oughta be in good shape for the IM season. "But," you ask, "when is the IM season opener?"

Well folks, I'm here to tell ya. In fact, this, "Bruin Recreation Page ", is your official 1988-89 IM/Sport Club/Rec Class Program. And it's free, every Wednesday in the Sports Section.

But it will have all the necessary details. Like when and how to sign-up for a particular IM league. And who the best 10 IM football teams are.

So look here every Wednesday and get involved--there's more than football and basketball. Indeed, there are hundreds of activities from Rec Class aerobics to IM water polo; from sport club Aikido to informal weight lifting. Besides BRUIN RECREATION, however, the upstairs offices in the John Wooden Center are the homes of Intramural Sports, Recreation Classes, and all Sport and Recreation Clubs, and can give you the latest and most complete information. So come by, or for more information call 825-3701. That's 825-3701.

No letdown for volleyball at Stanford

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

PALO ALTO— Despite two big wins against the nation's top teams, the UCLA women's volleyball team still had something to prove against the Stanford Cardinal. The northern rival overtook the Bruins in the Pac-10 and walked away with the conference title as well as a berth to the NCAA Final Four in 1987. At least for the returnees, this match was a means of revenge.

Last season, the two teams met twice in regular season play. The Bruins defeated the Cardinal at the Wooden Center early in '87. However, Stanford was able to return the favor in a crucial matchup at Maples Pavilion late in the season which destroyed all hopes of a UCLA conference championship.

After five victories and no losses, the Stanford Cardinal was not able to stand up to the blue and gold wave of momentum that the Bruins had gathered from the previous week's upsets.

The result? The Bruins easily defeated Stanford in a three-game sweep, the first shutout inflicted on the Cardinal since Oct. 1, 1981 when Cal Poly San Luis Obispo walked away with a 15-13, 15-13, and 15-11 win.

Eighty-six matches later, the Bruins broke the Cardinal streak with an easy 15-7, 15-3, and 15-9 win — handing Stanford its first Pac-10 loss of the season. The win made the Bruins 5-0 overall and 1-0 in conference play.

Games one and two plainly tell the story of the Stanford team that lost three starters from its national championship runner-up team to graduation. Setter Wendy Rush, outside hitter Teresa Smith, and middle blocker Nancy Reno were all missed in the new Stanford line-up. A combination of poor Stanford hitting with strong Bruin blocking held the Cardinal to a .000 hitting percentage in games one and two.

UCLA hit .185 and .478, respectively. Overall, Stanford was limited to a .080 hitting percentage while UCLA racked up .348.

With five consecutive wins and the No. 1 ranking in the country, the women's volleyball team is riding high with confidence.

"I feel much better about myself and the team as a whole," said middle blocker and All-American Daiva Tomkus, the team's leading blocker.

The Bruins are playing with a much more confident, bordering on arrogant attitude. There was no question on the minds of the Bruins, the Cardinal, or the 1846 fans about who the victor in the match was going to be.

That attitude ran over into the following night when the Bruins clobbered the California Golden Bears in three straight games.

The Bruins faced the Bears four times last season (three in regular season and one in the playoffs) and beat them in every outing.

Aside from some strong blocking on the part of the Bears, Cal put up little resistance to a varied UCLA attack. Outside hitter Evans provided the big gun from the left side with junior outside hitter Jenny Crocker pounding from the right. Again Youngs showed great athletic prowess with her strong attack from the middle as well as her blocking.

Game two was a more difficult task for the Bruins as the Bears began to adapt to UCLA's varied attack. Cal took a 10-5 lead before the Bruins began to strike back. However, Cal was able to hang on and win game two 8-15.

Banachowski took his team back for a pep talk before game three. In short, the team delivered. The Bruins flew to a 3-0 lead. Although the Bruins continued to pummel the Bears with a strong attack, Cal relied on some spectacular back row defense to stay in the game. The Bruins eventually went on to win 15-10.

The Bruins fell to a 5-13 deficit in the fourth and final game but came clawing back to a 15-13 win, their sixth of the year and second conference win.

Bruins rampage in the Rose Bowl

By Michael Bartlett
Staff Writer

The No. 2 team in the nation is the UCLA Bruins — for the first time since the 1980 season.

Terry Donahue's squad showed why they are so highly thought of by wiping out their non-conference opposition, emerging from September with a perfect 3-0 record.

The latest victim of the "Powder Blue Bullies", as the Bruins were dubbed in Sports Illustrated, was Long Beach State. The 49ers, quite frankly, did not belong on the same field as UCLA, and it was apparent in the final score, 56-3.

The Bruins marched up and down the field at will in the first half — the only one in which Heisman Trophy front-runner Troy Aikman played in — roaring to a 42-0 halftime lead while compiling 272 yards of total offense. When the night's contest was mercifully over, UCLA had rolled up the second biggest yardage total in school history, 662 yards.

Troy Aikman had another outstanding outing, completing 17 of 25 attempts for 272 yards and three touchdowns. One of those TDs went for 69 yards on a bomb to David Keating, the longest pass of Aikman's career.

Aikman's other touchdowns went to Danny Thompson (one yard) and to Reggie Moore (nine yards).

For the season, Aikman has completed 67.7 percent of his passes (44 of 65) for 640 yards, nine touchdowns and only one interception. Last year, after three games Aikman was 29 of 46 for 520 yards, one TD and no interceptions.

Eric Ball also called it an early night. His last carry came only 3:57 into the second quarter.

Long Beach State had certainly seen enough of him, as Ball rambled for 108 yards on a mere 11 carries. He scored twice on runs of 56 and 4 yards, the former being the longest run of his career.

"I couldn't have written the script any better," said UCLA coach Terry Donahue.

The Bruin defense had another outstanding game, limiting State to 129 total yards (107 passing, 22 rushing). The "D" even scored a touchdown of its own.

Marcus Turner tied two records with a 50-yard interception return for a score with 7:09 to play in the first half.

He now has 11 career picks, tying Bob Waterfield and Donn Moomaw for ninth on the all-time list. Turner also tied Bruin stand-out Jerry Robinson with his third career interception TD.

San Diego State

UCLA inaugurated the 1988 football season in splendid fashion, utterly destroying an outmanned San Diego State team 59-6 before 46,487 at the Rose Bowl.

The Bruins dominated the action from the start, and outplayed the Aztecs on offense, defense and special teams en route to a 31-0 halftime lead. UCLA led 45-0 before SDSU could even get on the board late in the fourth quarter — on a touchdown with just 10 minutes to play.

"Any time you can get off to a good, positive start to the season it's exciting," UCLA head coach Terry Donahue assessed.

The first time a UCLA player touched the football in 1988, he scored. Darryl Henley did the honors on an incredible, 89-yard punt return only 3:25 into the season.

With the score quickly 7-0 UCLA, the Aztecs knew they were in for a long night.

The Bruins amassed 538 yards of total offense, averaging 6.99 yards per play. The running game accounted for 315 yards, while four different quarterbacks passed for a total of 223 yards.

Defensively, State was held to a paltry 37 yards rushing (on 34 attempts) and 234 total yards on the night.

Heisman Trophy candidate Troy Aikman showed why he is being touted as the number one pick in the 1989 NFL draft, as he punctured the San Diego State defense for 155 yards and three touchdowns on 13 of 17 passing. Aikman threw no interceptions, was not sacked, and even rushed once for nine yards.

Aikman's first pass of 1988 was complete, but was then nullified by an offensive pass interference penalty.

Then, Aikman got hot, hitting on nine straight completions. By the time he finally missed, the Bruins led 21-0. Aikman's pass following that incompletion was good for another touchdown, to Offensive Player of the Game Mark Estwick, and a 28-point UCLA lead.

During the string, Aikman found Laurence Burkley for a 43-yard TD (capping a 1-play, 43-yard scoring drive), and Reggie Moore for a 15-yard TD.

"I was really pleased with the way my receivers played," Aikman said. "They came out and did an outstanding job. Don't forget, there were a lot of guys on offense who were out there for the first time."

Indeed, Burkley's touchdown was his first catch as a Bruin. Moore's TD was his first visit to the end zone after catching just two passes in all of 1987. On the night, no less than six receivers made their first career catches, including former quarterback Brendan McCracken.

With all the positives from the 59-6 rout aside, everyone on the Bruin sideline knew what was coming next: Nebraska.

The most popular quote of the night was, "Next week will be the true test." This sentiment was echoed by Aikman, Donahue and Eric Ball, whose fine effort of 122 yards on 17 carries should not be overlooked.

Donahue offered this perspective on the upcoming clash with the monsters from Lincoln, "The only way we'll know where our football team is is by playing Nebraska next week. Nothing derogatory to San Diego State, but Nebraska is vastly superior to them. Nebraska has been vastly superior to us the last couple times we've played them.

"They've scored 42 points on us the last three times we've played them. . .we've got to get those guys off that number."

Bruins rock, shock the Huskers

In a first-quarter outburst, UCLA pushes Nebraska every which way

By Brian Murphy
Sports Editor

It was 15 minutes of fury.

Fifteen minutes of pent-up hostility, 15 cathartic minutes in which the UCLA football team rid itself of stigmas and ghosts.

Stigmas and ghosts that said, "UCLA can't play with the big boys." Stigmas and ghosts that said, "UCLA has a great program, but it won't achieve national prominence until it can play with the Nebraskas and Oklahomas of the world."

And in 15 memorable minutes, it was done.

Fifteen minutes, of course, is the amount of time it took for UCLA to roll off 28 unanswered, awe-inspiring, first-quarter points in the face of a helpless Nebraska team on Sept. 10 at the Rose Bowl.

Twenty-eight points that sprung the Bruins to a 41-28 win over the No. 2-ranked Cornhuskers, a win that gave UCLA head coach Terry Donahue his 100th career win and gave his team the prestigious No. 2 national ranking it currently holds.

UCLA 41
Nebraska 28

It was 28 points that shocked a national television audience and a Rose Bowl crowd of 84,086. Twenty-eight points that firmly established UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman as a Heisman Trophy candidate.

And 28 points that Nebraska will not soon forget.

"As long as I've been here, we've never been down like that," a disconsolate Nebraska quarterback Steve Taylor said. "It was so disheartening."

"They played almost flawless football," said an equally disconsolate Nebraska head coach Tom Osborne. "They outplayed us so badly, we could never regroup."

"They came out with force, out-hitting us," Nebraska defensive back Charles Fryar said.

Did you catch all that? That was not UCLA talking about Nebraska, as would have been the case in 1983, 1984 or 1987.

That was Nebraska talking about UCLA.

To be sure, this was a new UCLA football team. This was a team that controlled the line of scrimmage. A team that knocked Nebraska off the ball. It was a UCLA team with an offensive line — tackles Bobby Menifield and Keith Jacobson, guards Lance Zeno and Rick Meyer and center Frank Cornish — that pushed the Huskers back.

> "They played almost flawless football. They outplayed us so badly, we could never regroup."
> —Tom Osborne

"We felt like we had something to prove," Aikman said. "They said we couldn't play with the big boys. We were stereotyped as a finesse team. We proved that stereotype was mistaken."

"Our offensive line is quicker — not bigger — but quicker than a year ago," Donahue said. "We wanted to get physical and relieve some pressure off of Troy. A lot of the credit goes to our line coaches Steve Axman and Eddie Kezirian."

Behind the born-again offensive line, the Bruins ran for 183 yards in the first half alone. For the game, tailback Eric Ball carried the ball 35 times for 148 yards. True freshman Shawn Wills, who continues to amaze, carried the ball four times for 73 yards.

And in the meantime, Aikman completed 13 of 22 passes for 205 yards and three touchdowns.

Put simply: the Bruins performed a good, old-fashioned butt-kicking.

And it was all over in that first quarter.

The anatomy of the dissection:

— On Aikman's first pass of the game, he hits tight end Charles Arbuckle over the middle on a short pattern. Arbuckle breaks the tackle of All-Big Eight linebacker LeRoy Etienne and races 57 yards, for the Bruins opening score. Two minutes, 21 seconds into the first quarter, it's UCLA 7, Nebraska 0.

— Wills takes a pitch from Aikman on the 50-yard line and sweeps left. He leaps over a pile of defenders, stumbles, regains his balance, breaks another tackle and sprints 50 yards for a Walter Payton-like touchdown. Eight minutes, 22 seconds into the first quarter, it's UCLA 14, Nebraska 0.

— After a wild sequence where UCLA linebacker Carnell Lake recovered a Nebraska fumble and, in turn, fumbled to teammate Eric Turner at the Husker 47-yard line, Aikman marches the team to the three-yard line, where he rolls right and hits Arbuckle again for a touchdown. Eleven minutes, 39 seconds into the first quarter, it's UCLA 21, Nebraska 0.

— And in the crown jewel of UCLA's opening quarter, cornerback Darryl Henley takes a Nebraska punt on his own 25-yard line, rolls to the left side of the field and, behind a perfectly executed wall of blockers, rumbles 75 yards for a touchdown. Fourteen minutes into the first quarter, it's UCLA 28, Nebraska 0.

"That punt return broke our backs," Osborne said.

All that was left was for Bruin strong safety Matt Darby to place the exclamation point on the quarter. Which he did. With force.

On the penultimate play of the first quarter, Taylor threw a screen pass to Ken Clark, who was instantly pummeled by a streaking Darby for a loss of three yards. A flash of powder-blue, and it was lights out.

But Darby wasn't through. To lead off the second quarter, Taylor, who was to be intercepted three times by a ubiquitous Bruin defense, threw a short, six-yard pass to Dana Brinson. Brinson, however, was brutalized by a ferocious, perfectly-timed hit from Darby that sent murmurs of shock throughout the Rose Bowl. The hit lacerated Brinson's mouth.

> "We were nothing short of fabulous. That was as good a first quarter as I've ever seen. The fans were on fire. The team was on fire."
> —Terry Donahue

It also sent a message to the nation: Yes, Virginia, UCLA can play with the big boys.

"We were nothing short of fabulous," Donahue said. "That was as good a first quarter as I've ever seen. The fans were on fire. The team was on fire. This was one of those things in athletics where everything was working, everything was clicking."

The happenings after the opening fifteen minutes were almost anti-climactic, with the exception of one play.

Nebraska was handed a freak touchdown in the second quarter when safety Mark Blazek intercepted an Aikman pass, fell down, then got up and jogged to the end zone.

Almost everyone, including Blazek himself it seemed, knew that his knees touched the ground, thus qualifying him as down. In a bizarre ruling, however, the referees huddled and announced that he was not down and gave him a touchdown.

After the game, referee James Sprenger admitted, "We understand we were wrong. We know we were wrong. Nobody wants to be more wrong than an official."

The ruling only seemed to fire up the crowd and the Bruins, who promptly marched 74 yards in 10 plays, the touchdown coming on a 11-yard pass from Aikman to David Keating.

The score re-established UCLA's momentum, made the score 35-7, and allowed the Bruins to spend the next two quarters basically running out the clock. Nebraska registered 15 second-half points for the final tally.

It was over. And while the UCLA student section, a raucous bunch from beginning to end, celebrated wildly, Donahue was hoisted on his shoulders by his players.

Win No. 100. A win over Nebraska. A No. 2 national ranking. A massive coming-out party in Pasadena, and the whole nation was invited to watch.

So leave it to Donahue himself to sum it up best.

"Tonight," he told a roaring alumni section, "is what college football at UCLA should be all about."

Bruin Notes - The Bruins travel to Washington this Saturday for the Pac-10 conference opener. The game will be nationally televised on ABC at 12:30. . . The Bruins will most likely be without the services of pre-season All-American Charles Arbuckle. The big play tight end from Houston strained ligaments in his left knee against Cal-State Long Beach while hauling in a 16 yard pass from Troy Aikman. Look for Corwin Anthony and Randy Austin to fill in for Arbuckle. . .UCLA has not won in Seattle since 1978, when the Bruins won a squeaker, 10-7. . .At press time, Don James' club is ranked 17th in the nation. Last year, the Bruins mauled Washington 47-14 in the Rose Bowl.

UCLA football goes big time after Nebraska win

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

Step aside Barry Switzer, Tom Osborne and Jimmy Johnson.

Clear the streets in Norman, Lincoln and Miami. There's a new sheriff in town, name's Terry Donahue.

And with the beating his powder blue posse put on the big bad Nebraska Cornhuskers, UCLA moved into the forefront of college football, to finally be included with teams the likes of the Sooners, Huskers and Hurricanes.

The 41-28 victory over Nebraska, the 100th career win for Donahue at the helm of UCLA, may have been the biggest in the history of the program. After being blown away by the Big 8 in their last four contests, by a total score of 164-49, Donahue and his team showed, finally, that they could play with the big boys. And this was supposed to be a rebuilding year.

Game Analysis

It took Terry Donahue five years to beat Southern Cal, but once he did so, UCLA stepped out of the shadow of the traditionally powerful Trojans, and UCLA became one of the most successful football programs in the country.

Through the eighties, Donahue's teams have been some of the most successful in the country, appearing in seven straight bowls and winning six straight, going back to the 1982 Rose Bowl victory over Michigan.

But there was always a stigma, always a nagging question which lingered. Even with victories over Miami, BYU, Iowa and Florida, there was one thing that UCLA, under Donahue, had failed to do in their emergence in the eighties.

Beat Nebraska and Oklahoma.

The Sooners and the Huskers — the two most dominating teams in college football. Big, strong, fast; always in the running for the national title. Their annual "range war" has become a college football classic.

Beating these two teams can vault you into the national spotlight. Just ask Miami.

By beating Nebraska in the 1983 Orange Bowl, behind the strength of Bernie Kosar's arm, and by handing Switzer's Sooners three straight defeats, including last year's national title game in the '88 Orange Bowl, the 'Canes grabbed two national titles and have now reached perennial powerhouse status.

The going was a lot tougher for the Bruins, however.

Donahue's first foray against the Huskers came in 1983, when he took Rick Neuheisel and Co. into Lincoln. The result? After falling behind 10-0, the Huskers rolled off 42 straight points to send the defending Rose Bowl champs packing.

The next season, 1984, saw UCLA again as defending Rose Bowl champs, after a 45-9 thumping of Illinois. Sports Illustrated ranked the Bruins No. 1 in the country, and Donahue's club headed into the sundrenched Rose Bowl to face off with the Huskers in the revenge game. Outcome? A 42-3 shellacking by Nebraska. The Bruins must have known what Illinois felt like.

The Bruins took a year off from the Big 8, and had a stellar year, beating defending champ BYU in their opener and ending the year with a resounding, 45-28 victory over Iowa.

The following September, UCLA traveled to Norman to open against the defending national champions for the second straight year. Jammin' Jamelle Holieway and a bruising Oklahoma defense, led by none other than the Boz, Brian Bosworth, crushed the Bruins 38-3 in front of a national television audience.

Not on the sidelines but undoubtedly watching the game was a UCLA student who had recently transferred from OU. That would be Troy Aikman.

The next year, Donahue traveled to Lincoln once again, this time with Aikman at quarterback and the much heralded Gaston Green at tailback. The score was respectable, and early on the UCLA defense held firm against the vaunted Husker ground game. That's when Nebraska took to the air, as Steve Taylor threw for five touchdowns to lead the Cornhuskers to a 42-33 victory.

The stigma of not beating these teams, in games that were seen nationwide, definitely had its effects on the public image of UCLA football. Bosworth and Taylor both ripped the program in interviews after their victories, and the press constantly reminded fans and players alike that while UCLA had been successful in the eighties, it had failed to win against the "Big Two."

The Bruins were branded a "finesse" team, that always folded in front of the strength and power football of the corn-fed (and who knows what other substances) midwestern behemoths. "Sure", they said, "UCLA is good, but not great. They can't play 'real' football."

UCLA was always heralded in the preseason magazines, but never mentioned in the same breath as Miami, Oklahoma, or Nebraska, the mighty triumvirate of college football.

All that changed the evening of September 10, 1988, some time after 5 p.m.

That's when the finesse team undressed the power team in what had to be the greatest quarter of football ever played by a Donahue squad. UCLA grabbed that big red flag with the big white 'N' and dragged it through the mud.

They bullied the Huskers. Embarrassed them. Pushed them around and taunted them. Never has a Tom Osborne team been beaten like that. The Bruin linemen went into the trenches and blew Big Red right off the ball. Their fans were silenced. The victory was total and absolute.

The finesse moniker went right out the window when Matt Darby made Dana Brinson a permanent piece of the Rose Bowl turf.

And the greatest thing about it? It was on national television, for the entire country to see.

"This is a significant win for UCLA because it puts our program on a new plateau," said Donahue, who notched his 100th career win as UCLA head coach against the Huskers that warm September night.

"This was an important game for UCLA from a national perspective. It was the No. 2 team (Nebraska) versus the No. 5 team (UCLA) on national television and we won. It removes the stigma that we couldn't beat Nebraska and play Big Eight teams."

It also shows that UCLA is

Olympics: UCLA athletes

Mike Powell (USA)

Powell was a slight surprise to make the team in the Long Jump. He has improved tremendously over the past few seasons. He was a Pac-10 champ for the Bruins in the long jump in 1986. He set a personal best to make the squad in the Olympic Trials in July by leaping 27-4 1/2. He outjumped Larry Myricks, the third best jumper ever and an Olympic teammate, at a meet in Brussels this summer.

Kevin Young (USA)

Young was a three-time Pac-10 and two-time NCAA champion in the intermediates. He almost did not qualify as he hit his first hurdle of the year in the trials, but he recovered to edge out rival Danny Harris for the final spot. Young just completed his final year as as Bruin. He ran his best time of 47.72 this summer in Europe. Despite his successful year, Track and Field News questions the long collegiate season, but still calls him "the leader of event's youth brigade.". Young is great down the stretch and has a tremendous stride. He also ran on the NCAA record setting 4 X 400 team, and is an alternate for the Olympic squad.

WOMEN'S TRACK AND FIELD

Evelyn Ashford (USA)

The flag-bearer for the American team at the Opening Ceremonies, Ashford was the world record holder in the 100 meters with a 10.76, until Florence Griffith-Joyner obliterated it at Trials this summer with a 10.49. Ashford won the 100 Meters and the 4 X 100 in the LA Games. She holds the Olympic record in the event at 10.97. She took second at Trials behind Griffith-Joyner. Ashford also took fifth in the 100 in the 1976 games in Montreal. She is one of the top, if not the best, female sprinters ever. She has a good chance of battling the East Germans for a silver or bronze. Ashford will also medal in the 4 X 100 if the exchanges go okay.

Gail Devers-Roberts(USA)

Devers-Roberts could have run numerous events, but will stick with the 100 meter hurdles and alternate status on the 4 X 100 relay team. She is the co-American record holder in the 100 Meter hurdles (12.61) with ex-teammate and friend Jackie Joyner-Kersee. Devers-Roberts was the second place finisher in the event at Trials. She took third in the NCAA's in the event after stumbling on the eighth hurdle. She was an NCAA champion in the 100 meters and the 4 X 400 relay this past year. Devers-Roberts has great 100 meter speed, which should help her make the finals. Track and Field News predicts Devers-Roberts to finish seventh in Seoul, but top among Americans. Devers-Roberts scored 34 points in UCLA's second place finish at the NCAA championships. She is one of the best UCLA female track and field athletes ever.

Florence Griffith-Joyner (USA)

Hands down, the fastest woman ever. She broke Ashford's world record at Trials by running a 10.49 — which was faster than many of the men at Trials. This record will be thought of in terms of Bob Beamon's long jump, and Ben Johnson's 100 meters: almost insurmountable. She holds UCLA school records in the 200 meters (22.23) and the 400 meters (50.94). Her best event is, surprisingly, the 200. She will not, however, be permitted to run in her one-legged lace and fluorescent tights that caused such a stir at Trials. Track and Field News predicts she will take the gold, but stated that another world record in the 100 meters seems improbable. She will also run the 200, where she set the American record at the trials with a 21.77, and will go for the world record of 21.71. Griffith-Joyner should anchor the 4 X 100 relay, and maybe run a leg on the 4 X 400 team as well.

Sherri Howard (USA)

Howard has earned a spot on her third Olympic team. In 1984, she ran a leg on the first place 4 X 400 team, but did not run in 1980 because of the boycott. She was an All-American at UCLA in 1981 in the 400 meters, 800 meters and the 1600 meter Relay. She has run a personal best split time of 48.43. Howard set the American Junior record in 1979, clocking in at 51.09. She ran on the 1982 national championship team with Joyner-Kersee and Griffith-Joyner.

Jackie Joyner-Kersee (USA)

Track experts around the world call her the "Best female athlete ever." Joyner-Kersee will compete in the heptathlon and the long jump in the Games. Her best event is the heptathlon, where she holds the world record at 7215 points, set at Trials. She also is the co-American hurdle champ with Devers-Roberts at 12.61. This phenomenal athlete is also the American record holder in the long jump at 24-5 1/2, a world record until recently. Joyner-Kersee is listed in ten different events for the best UCLA marks ever. She ran for the national champion teams in 1982 and 1983 where she set NCAA meet records. Track and Field News analysis in the heptathlon read: "Jackie: 'nuff said about the winner" and "Unbeaten, and unbeatable, since '84. One of biggest favorites anywhere." The analysis was headlined, "JJK Without a Doubt." She has tremendous speed and strength and, by the way, is married to UCLA women's track head coach Bobby Kersee. Jackie also played basketball for UCLA.

Francie Larrieu Smith (USA)

Larrieu Smith is the most experienced runner in the 10,000 meter field. She made the Olympic team in 1972 and 1976 in the 1500. Her best time in the event was 32:03.63, run this year. In 1974 as a Bruin, she set 3 school records which still stand in the 800 meters (2:04.37), 1500 meters (4:10.03), and the 3000 meters (9:03.2). She took first in the 880, mile, and the two-mile in the 1974 NCAA championships. Track and Field News describes her as a "super vet who is in the shape of her life..."

Karin Smith (USA)

Smith is competing on her fourth U.S. Olympic team. She took eighth in the javelin in the '76 and 1984 Games. Her best mark of 212-6 in the event set in 1980 is far behind the distances thrown by the British and the East Germans. She was an NCAA champion in the event in 1976 and 1977. Smith is the second best UCLA javelin thrower ever.

MEN'S GYMNASTICS

Tony Pineda (Mexico)
This will be his second Olympics for Mexico. In 1984, his best Olympic event was the pommel horse where he finished seventh. He ended up placing 26th overall in the all-around. He is the only member of the Mexican team. His event in the Games will be the all-around.

MEN'S SOCCER

Paul Caligiuiri (USA)

Before the Olympics, this Bruin great enjoyed a successful soccer stint in Germany in the Second Division called SV Meppn. He is one of two Americans playing outdoor soccer in Europe. Caligiuri will play as a defender for the Americans.

Paul Krumpe (USA)

Krumpe plays for the Chicago Sting of the Major Indoor Soccer League. He will play as a defender.

Dave Vanole (USA)

He has been a starter with the National team since 1986. His position is goalkeeper.
Note- UCLA is the only school in the country to have three former players on the Olympic squad. No other has more than one. All three played on UCLA on the 1985 National Championship team.

MEN'S SWIMMING

Roberto Cassio (Italy)

A surprise entry, Cassio was never an All-American at UCLA nor did he ever win a Pac-10 championship. His event will be the 200 individual medley.

Mark Dean (USA)

Dean had to upset 100 meter butterfly world record holder Pablo Morales in order to make the team. He scored 39 points in the Pac-10 championships and two points in the NCAA championships this past year. He was an All-American in the 400 meter medley and the 200 meter butterfly. Dean will swim the 200 meter butterfly at the Games.

Rodrigo Gonzalez (Mexico)

Gonzalez is not a surprise. He was an All-American in the 800 freestyle relay, the 100 meter freestyle, the 200 meter freestyle, and the 200 meter individual medley. He scored 25 points in the Pac-10 championships. He will swim the 100 free, 200 free and the 200 IM at the Games.

Tom Jager (USA)

Jager is one of the best sprinters to ever swim at UCLA. A four-time All American, his last year as a Bruin was in 1986. In 1985 he won the 50 yard freestyle in the NCAA championships. Jager holds the world record in the 50 meter freestyle. He will swim the 50 freestyle, and the 400 freestyle relay at the Games.

Giovanni Minervini (Italy)

Minervini ranks as one of the best breaststrokers ever at UCLA. He won the NCAA 100 breaststroke event in 1986 and 1988. He was a four-time All-American as a Bruin.

Franz Mortensen (Denmark)

He was an All-American in 1984 for the Bruins in the 400 and the 800 meter freestyle relays. In the 400 meter relay, he was a member of the national championship squad. Mortensen will swim the 50 freestyle, the 100 freestyle and the 200 freestyle in Seoul.

Craig Oppel (USA)

Oppel holds the UCLA school record in the 200 yard freestyle. He scored 27 points in the NCAA championships. The Des Moines native is a three-time All-American. Oppel still is a current member of UCLA swim team. He will compete in the 800 freestyle relay and the 400 freestyle relay.

Peter Rohde (Denmark)

Only attended UCLA for one year in 1987 after transferring from Pepperdine. Rohde was an All-American in the 200 individual medley, the 400 medley relay and the 400 and 800 meter freestyle relays. At the Olympics, Rohde will compete in the 50 freestyle, the 100 freestyle and the 200 individual medley.

Darren Ward (Canada)

Ward won the Pac-10 200 yard individual medley. He holds the freshman record in the event. He will be a sophomore for the Bruins after the Games. Ward will compete in the 200 individual medley, 400 freestyle relay, and the 800 freestyle relay in Seoul.

MEN'S VOLLEYBALL

Karch Kiraly (USA)

Kiraly is recognized as the world's top volleyball player and is captain of the top-ranked Olympic team. A four-time All-American during a brilliant UCLA career, Kiraly led the U.S. team to the 1984 gold medal in Los Angeles, as well as the 1985 World Championship and the 1986 World Cup. While playing for UCLA head coach Al Scates' powerhouse squads, UCLA won four NCAA championships. Kiraly was NCAA MVP in 1981 and 1982. Team USA is favored to win the gold medal in Seoul, most likely against the Soviets.

Ricci Luyties (USA)

A setter for Team USA, Luyties joined the team in 1985 after a stellar career at UCLA. Luyties was a two-time All-American, helping the Bruins to four NCAA titles between 1981 and 1984.

Doug Partie (USA)

Another member of the 1984 gold medal squad, this outside hitter gained All-American honors in 1982. He is another member of the powerhouse squads of the late 70's and early 80's.

Dave Saunders (USA)

The outstanding middle blocker was a three time All-American as a Bruin. Partie had a hand in four NCAA titles, from 1981 to 1984. Partie was also a three time NCAA all-tournament selection. He will start alongside Kiraly and Luyties in Seoul.

WOMEN's VOLLEYBALL

Liz Masakayan (USA)

"Flying" Masakayan was a two time All-American as a Bruin, and led UCLA to its fourth national title in 1984. She holds 11 UCLA match, single season, and career records.

for what was in essence the first time all season.

Problems with the condition of the North Athletic Field practice facility moved double days to Palos Verdes, so the UC Irvine contest on Sept. 14 was the one of the first times the team had seen their home turf.

It proved to be a bountiful homecoming celebration, as UCLA defeated the Anteaters 4-0 on two goals by Billy Thompson, and one each by Chris Roosen and Sam George.

"Playing Irvine we found that we were capable of scoring," reported Schmid, "and Sam started to emerge, as did Ray Fernandez."

"Of all the freshmen, Sam has matured the most from the first couple of weeks, and Ray is taking on more responsibility."

In the final tune-up match, George opened the scoring against Southern California College (not the university of our highest esteem) only nine minutes into an eventual 5-0 blanking.

A curving corner-kick from the right side found its way into the corner, and George also earned another point when he assisted on Steve Black's goal just minutes before the half.

Black, making a strong debut following completion of summer school, scored again at the 53rd minute mark of a Fabrizio Luppi cross set up by Fernandez. Walk-on Cobi Jones and Aaron Muth closed out the scoring.

Schmid: "We played a better second half than first, we were moving off the ball better and Cobi made a big impact."

Though aware that the caliber of those last two opponents was not on the same level as the first four, the wins bore well for the Bruin future according to Schmid.

"Moreso than ever our roles are starting to emerge, the difference between starter and reserve is growing, and having Steve Black back makes this team more competitive."

It all helps when you're able to see these things and win at the same time, and Santa Clara means the start of the true West Coast test."

SCOTT WEEASING/Daily Bruin

Aaron Muth goes up for the 'header' against Southern California College. The Bruins upped their record to 3-3 with the 5-0 victory.

Former UCLA All-Americans Ricci Luyties (above) and Doug Partie are currently in Seoul as part of the U.S Olympic volleyball squad. Both players are starters on the squad that is favored to win the gold medal at the Summer Games. Luyties will handle most of the setting chores for the American squad, while middle blocker Partie will look to put up a solid block at the net. Joining Luyties and Partie are former Bruins Dave Saunders and team captain Karch Kiraly, both All-Americans for UCLA head coach Al Scates.

ready for the big time. The National Championship. If not this year, soon. Thanks to Donahue and his recruiting coordinator Bill Rees, UCLA has a stockpile of weapons that the Soviets should be nervous about.

For the last five years, Rees and Donahue have trekked across the country, raiding the hotbeds of high school football, stealing the talent right out the backyards of Oklahoma, Texas and the like.

Take a look at this year's starters. Charles Arbuckle and Reggie Moore hail from Texas. Darby is from Virginia. Eric Ball and Mike Farr are from Michigan. Frank Cornish is from Illinois. Add all the talent the Bruins hoarded in California, and this year's recruiting class, which includes future phenoms Kevin Williams (Texas) and Kerry Ferrell (New Jersey).

And how about all those stars on the horizon, who watched Nebraska get their heads handed to them on national television. In beautiful Southern California weather, no less. Donahue and Rees won't have to leave Westwood ever again. Recruits will be knocking down their doors begging to get in.

This victory was the final ingredient, the key that has opened the door to national prominence and recognition. In short, as Aretha Franklin once crooned "R-E-S-P-E-C-T".

So make room, Jimmy Johnson. Step aside Barry Switzer. Slide over, Coach Osborne. Terry Donahue and his Bruins have finally arrived.

And they'll be staying awhile.

Who's No. 1? Just ask Bruin nose guard Jim Wahler.

USC

look for more consistency from Peete this year. "Sweet Peete" (known for his sweet tooth) threw 12 interceptions last year, including two each in the three regular season losses to Oregon, Notre Dame and Michigan State, and three more against the Spartans in the 20-17 Rose Bowl defeat. When Peete was on, as he was against UCLA, he was sensational, but when he was off, as he was when he threw for 70 yards while completing seven of 20 passes in a 12-10 victory over Arizona, the Trojans struggled.

The rest of the backfield returns intact, with senior tailback Steve Webster leading a bevy of Trojan running backs. Webster, recovering from a knee injury suffered against UCLA in the season finale, gained 1109 yards last season and scored six touchdowns. He had six 100 plus games for the Trojans last season.

Even without Webster, Troy's backfield will be solid. Highly-touted sophomores Scott Lockwood and Ricky Earvins both have shown promise, and the fullback position is also capable, behind rugged Leroy Holt and hard-hitting (literally) Aaron Emmanuel. Holt was a tough short-yardage runner who returns to his starting spot for the second straight year. Emmanuel, who missed all of last year after belting two SC co-eds, is back and looked impressive against Stanford, rushing for 121 yards against the Cardinal.

Smith won't have many sleepless nights over his receiving corps, either.

Split end Erik Affholter, whose controversial, sprawling touchdown reception sent USC to the Rose Bowl last year, was also the team's leading receiver with 44 catches. Affholter, who has deceptive speed and great hands, will be an inviting target for Peete, as will all-Pac-10 tight end Paul Green (31 catches, 10.2 yards per catch and one touchdown), an outstanding blocker and receiver.

Filling in at the flanker spot will be junior John Jackson, who takes over the position for graduated Randy Tanner. J.J. saw plenty of action his first two seasons at both receiving positions and started three games for the Trojans in 1988. He finished the season with 37 catches and seven touchdowns.

The offensive line, as usual, is big, and returns three starters from last year's Rose Bowl team. Mammoth tackles John Guerrero (6-4, 320) and Brent Parkinson (6-6, 260) and guard Mark Tucker (6-3, 265) are back to provide protection for Peete. Parkinson moves from the guard position to fill in for the graduated All-American Dave Cadigan, the New York Jets first round pick.

The center position belongs to another behemoth, junior Brad Leggett (6-5, 270) and 1986 Junior College All-American Bill Schultz (6-5, 270) will take over for Parkinson at left guard.

The Trojans are going to be very tough on the other side of the ball as well. Smith has seven starters returning from last year, including honors candidates Cleveland Colter and Mark Carrier.

The tandem of Colter and Carrier at the safety spots give the Trojans their hardest hitting tandem since Dennis Smith and Ronnie Lott. Colter is a tremendous hitter with a nose for the ball who led Southern Cal with six interceptions.

Sophomore free safety Carrier is another big hitter who returns as the team's top tackler and also had four interceptions as well. At the corners look for incumbent starter Chris Hale and junior Chris Spears.

Linebacker should be of some concern for Smith, as only Scott Ross returns from last year's starting linebacking corps and even he went into fall practice listed as a second teamer. Junior Delmar Chelsey, who started six games last year, will take over the strongside inside 'backing duties, while the weakside will be patrolled by sophomore Brian Tuliau, who takes over for graduated Keith Davis.

Outside linebacker is also a question mark, as both Marcus Cotton and Bill Stokes are gone. Look for junior Michael Williams and sophomore Craig Hartsuyker will fill in for Cotton and Stokes, respectively. Also look for last year's Prop. 48 "victim" Junior Seau, 6-3, 240 pound animal from Oceanside.

The defensive line returns intact, with junior defensive tackle Tim Ryan leading the way. Ryan, who recorded 109 tackles last year, joins junior guard Dan Owens and sophomore nose guard Don Gibson on the experienced defensive line, which, with the experienced linebackers, will be a key in SC's success.

Kicking chores again go to Quin Rodriguez and Chris Sperle, back for his fourth season punting.

All in all, hopes are high in Troy, but a tough schedule that includes Oklahoma, Washington and Notre Dame at home in the Coliseum, and Arizona, ASU and UCLA on the road will test the Trojans. If Peete and the linebackers come through, look for the Trojans in Pasadena on New Year's Day. If not, well, a bowl game will be in the picture, just not the Rose Bowl.

Washington

Chandler. Conklin saw some action last year when Chandler went down with a hip-pointer, even starting the 21-21 tie against Arizona. However, Washington is the only Pac-10 team which does not return a starter at quarterback, and Husky fortunes ride with the success of Conklin.

Unfortunately for James, Conklin's debut against Purdue was less than impressive, as he only completed five of 18 passes for 57 yards, one touchdown and three interceptions. Conklin did improve the following week, completing 17 of 25 for 183 yards in a 31-17 victory, but that was against over-achieving Army.

So far, the jury is still out on Conklin.

Another concern for the Huskies is an unproven receiver corps, which returns only flanker Brian Slater. The senior is the only proven commodity among the receivers after leading Washington in touchdown receptions and averaging 18.3 yards per catch last year.

Look for junior Andre Riley to fill in for graduated Darryl Franklin at the split end position, while redshirt freshmen LaMar Mitchell and James Sawyer, and sophomore J.D. Hill will all look to contribute. Tight end is also a potential trouble spot, with last year's starter Bill Ames out for the year with a knee injury. Sophomore Mark Kilpack will have to pick up the slack.

But before you write off the Huskies chances in 1988, look to their two bright spots. Don James has a powerful running game and perhaps the league's best offensive line.

Volleyball: In Hawaii

athletic prowess and poise. After spending her high school and club career attacking from the outside, Youngs has converted to middle blocker to replace 6-4 freshman Rachel Norris, who dislocated her knee during the pre-season. Adapting to the position, Youngs is now third on the team in kills and second in block assists.

Banachowski calls Youngs, "One of the best athletes, in terms of talent and ability, on the team."

UCLA's victory over the Illini proves that the young Bruin squad also has the ability to play together. With all six starters returning to the previously top-ranked team in the nation, teamwork was the essential factor in defeating the eastern rival.

Senior All-American setter Ann Boyer varied the attack of the UCLA team, allowing five Bruins to gain double digits in the kill column.

Aside from Evans and Youngs, junior Jenny Crocker has also showed a quick return to the Bruin routine after missing a year with calf surgery. The 6-0 outside hitter is currently fifth on the team in kills and is also showing an element of consistency, hitting .338. Crocker, who is in her fourth year at UCLA, is also a good complement to senior Ann Boyer in bringing experience and leadership to UCLA.

Although Bruin teams of the past have been criticized for a lack of killer instinct, the 1988 squad shows no sign of lacking one. The underclassmen have shown a strong interest in returning to the Final Four, a position that has not been attained in three years. Although Boyer is the only senior on the team who could logically assume the leadership role, she is strategically located in the key motivating position at setter.

As the 'quarterback' of the squad, she is in a role that could immediately start a Bruin roll or stop an opposing one.

Depth on the bench was the key concern for Banachowski at the outset of the season. Now, the winningest coach in NCAA women's volleyball Division I history will be able to sleep better at night knowing that Elaine Youngs is able to fill the shoes of 6-4 Rachel Norris. . .not an easy task. In addition to Youngs, Banachowski has a host of talented sophomores on the bench that saw limited action in 1987.

Pia Svenson, a 6-1 middle blocker has recently returned to practice and is showing marked improvement every day, according to Banachowski. In addition, outside hitters Ali Dickson, Karen Hansen, and Jennifer McCloskey all saw action in 1987 replacing injured starters.

In three games against San Diego State, Nebraska, and Long Beach State, Aikman has completed 67.7 percent of his passes (44 of 65) for 640 yards, nine touchdowns and only one interception. His passing efficiency rating is an incredible 193.0.

Joining the much heralded quarterback for head coach Terry Donahue will be senior Eric Ball. The 6-1½, 216 lb. tailback will be expected to take the place of Green, the most prolific runner in UCLA history. Ball, the hero of the 1986 Rose Bowl, looks up to the task, as his 148 punishing yards against Nebraska and 122 against the Aztecs attest.

Ball is backed up by an impressive array of runners, including solid sophomore Brian Brown and sensational freshman Shawn Wills, who burst onto the scene with 73 yards in four carries and a touchdown against the Huskers. Donahue also has at his disposal the nation's top prep running back last year, Kevin Williams.

At fullback, bruising Mark Estwick (5-10, 223) will see plenty of action. Estwick, a walk-on last season, was also impressive against the Big Red.

Donahue had to have been concerned about his receiving corps this year, losing starters Flipper Anderson and Paco Craig to graduation. But it looks like the Aikman aerial circus will be back for an encore performance after all.

Look for All-American candidate Charles Arbuckle to put up some big numbers this year. Already highly touted by most of the pre-season magazines, the big Texan went out and showed the country that they should believe the hype.

Arbuckle hauled down five passes for 100 yards and two touchdowns against the Huskers, including a brilliant 57 yard pass play to put UCLA up 7-0.

Taking over at the flanker spot will be Mike Farr. Farr, whose father was All-America at UCLA in the 60s, made a name for himself last year, constantly going down the middle and making tough catches in traffic.

Reggie Moore, who was highly recruited coming out of Houston as a high school senior, has tremendous speed and quick hands, and should be a dangerous deep threat.

Look for tight end Corwin Anthony, converted flanker Brendan McCracken and split end David Keating to make big contributions as well.

Going into the season, the offensive line was as big a question mark as Donahue had. All qualms and fears were knocked aside however, as Frank Cornish and Co. proved themselves admirably with their dominating line play against Nebraska.

Cornish (6-4½, 265), who moved from left guard to center this season, has made a seemingly easy adjustment to his new position. Joining him up front will be guards Rick Meyer (6-6½, 264) and Lance Zeno (6-4, 260), who both have starting experience. They will be joined by two talented tackles Bobby Menifield (6-1, 260) and Keith Jacobson (6-5½, 260).

Defensively, UCLA looks even tougher than it was a year ago, when it led the Pac-10 in almost every defensive category. Only four starters return from last year's rugged defensive unit, but five years of bumper crop recruiting are really paying off.

The defensive line is led by big Jim Wahler, a second team All-Pac-10 defensive tackle last year. The 6-4½, 263 pound senior, who set a UCLA football record with a 452 pound bench press, will move over into the nose guard position vacated by three time All-Pac-10 performer Terry Tumey.

Lining up on either side of Wahler will be junior Mike Lodish (6-3, 253), this year's Bruin Brawn lifting champ, and sophomore Bryan Wilcox (6-7, 256). Both performed well against Nebraska, stuffing the vaunted Husker running game and blowing Tom Osborne's huge line off the ball.

The linebacking corps will again be solid, led by the Cadillac of defense, second team All-American Carnell Lake. Last year's runner-up for the Pac-10 Defensive Player of the Year, Lake (6-0½, 204) is a top candidate for this year's Butkus award, handed out annually to the nation's premiere linebacker. Lake finished the season with 88 tackles and 13 sacks.

Back from injuries last year is Eric Smith, who was being touted as an All-American before being sidelined by a back injury. Smith (6-3½, 236) finished the 1986 season with 70 tackles and 11 sacks. If he comes back strong, he and Lake will give plenty of opposing quarterbacks nightmares.

Inside, senior Chance Johnson (6-1, 235) returns from an outstanding '87 season. While not as heralded as last year's inside mate Ken Norton, Johnson still made his presence felt to opposing offenses, coming up with 108 tackles Filling All-Pac-10 linebacker Ken Norton's seriously big shoes won't be easy, but so far junior Craig Davis (6-2, 208) has a done a solid job. As a back-up last year, Davis made 58 tackles.

Add names like seniors Doug Kline, Billy Ray and redshirt freshman Stacy Argo to the list, and Donahue's linebacking corps is as formidable as any in the nation.

Three starters graduated from last year's secondary, leaving only cornerback and punt returner extraordinaire Darryl Henley. However, before rival offensive coordinators staft making any plans, they better get hold of some game film from Tom Osborne.

Grab a pencil and write down the name Matt Darby. This sinister hitter from Virginia Beach, VA, has Bruin coaches and fans alike speaking in hushed tones of such past names as Kenny Easley and Don Rogers.

Against Nebraska, this redshirt freshman was all over the field, committing felonious assaults on anything red and moving. In particular, his hit on Dana Brinson, which on television sounded like a ripe melon hurled onto the pavement, would have been illegal if done on the street. The frightening thing is. . . he's only a freshman.

Joining Darby at the free safety spot is another vicious hitter, sophomore Eric Turner. Known as 'E-Rock' for his sledgehammer hits on opponents, he had three interceptions last year as a freshman All-American. Teamed with Darby, UCLA may want to keep an extra ambulance on the sideline. Better safe than sorry.

Senior Marcus Turner will take over the right side corner spot.

All-Pac-10 place kicker Alfredo Velasco returns for his junior season, after a sensational sophomore year.

Going into spring practice, UCLA only had eight starters returning from a team that dominated the Pac-10. It looked like this would certainly be rebuilding year. But thanks to the hard off-season work by Donahue and his recruiting coordinator Bill Rees, the Bruins have hardly lost a step.

Weathersby and Aaron Jenkins return, which is certainly good news for Husky fans. The versatile and durable Weathersby led the team in rushing last year, finishing with 682 yards and a 4.7 yard per carry average. Weathersby ranks fifth in career rushing totals and fourth on the career receiving totals at UW.

Jenkins, a bruising fullback, wrecked the Boilermakers in the opener, rushing for 162 punishing yards on 24 carries. He was less impressive against Army, however, only gaining 35 yards on 11 carries.

Last year, Jenkins averaged 5.2 yards per carry and scored five touchdowns. Jenkins and Weathersby both must produce big numbers this year and keep the pressure off the inexperienced Conklin if the Huskies are to contend for the conference title.

The 6-3, 290 pound Outland Trophy candidate Zandowsky anchors a big strong offensive line, which returns four of five starters and averages a hefty 274 pounds.

Scott Jones (6-6, 264) a converted tight end, will fill the weak side tackle spot left vacant by the loss of graduated Rick McLeod. The guards are well stocked, with incumbent starters Brett Wiese (6-3½, 284) and monstrous Kelly John-Lewis (6-8, 299).

At center, ironman Bern Brostek (6-2½, 270) returns to continue his string of 24 straight starts. The junior from Honolulu started for the Huskies as a true freshman, and has become a fixture at center.

On defense, the linebacking corps was ravaged by graduation. Inside linebackers David Rill, UW's second all-time leading tackler, and three year starters Tom Erlandson and Bo Yates are gone. Joining imposing senior inside 'backer Ricky Andrews, who moves from the outside position, will be three redshirt freshmen including Chico Fraley, who returned an interception 72 yards for a touchdown against Army. Promising talent also comes from Corey Brown and Marc Goudeau, who will take up the outside linebacking duties.

The defensive line looks solid, with two starters, tackle Dennis Brown (a potential All-American) and Bob Willig back in action. Sophomore Jeff Knowles, at 6-4, 270 will replace departed Brian Habib at the nose guard spot.

The secondary, which led the league in pass defense, yielding only five scores through the air, should again be solid, as the Huskies return five players with starting experience. Look for Le Lo Lang and Art Malone at the corners, with hard-hitting safeties Daryl Hall and Eugene Burkhalter roam the middle.

The kicking game, affected by the loss of place kicker/punter Brandy Brownlee, will be split between John McCallum as place kicker and Troy McNair handling the punting chores.

All in all, the unproven passing game, led by the inexperienced Conklin, and the young linebacking corps must produce, or the "James Gang" just might spend another season watching the Rose Bowl instead of playing there.

Arizona

at Oklahoma, 28-10. Tomey used the Oregon State contest to settle what had been a nagging controversy: his starting quarterback choice.

Southern Methodist transfer Bobby Watters was the easy choice last year, after having thrown for over 2,000 yards in his junior year with the Mustangs. Watters' thumb, however, met up with a UCLA helmet in Arizona's third game of the season. The helmet got the best of the encounter and Watters was sidelined for the rest of what would have been his senior year with a broken thumb.

Watters petitioned the conference for an additional year of eligibility and was granted his wish.

Meanwhile, with the injury to Watters, true freshman Ronald Veal was unexpectedly thrust into the spotlight. While he struggled a bit in his passing game, completing less than 50 percent of his passes, Veal did lead the team in rushing last year and was selected by the Sporting News as the top freshman quarterback in America.

So Tomey was faced with a bit of a decision: did he thirst for a drink of Watters or was he hungry for a little Veal?

Veal won out for the start against the Beavers, but in the middle of the second quarter with Oregon State leading, Tomey had seen enough. He went to Watters, who led the Cats to victory.

Ever since that, it's been Watters, Watters everywhere.

He completed eight of 14 passes for 139 yards and one touchdown in leading the win over Texas Tech. And the controversy has been settled.

Not that there should have been any controversy in the first place. Tomey's unique offense, a hybrid of the wishbone and the run-and-shoot, is an offense that likes to run, run and run some more. The Cats ran the ball an astounding 72 times against Texas Tech.

The workhorses of the running game are experienced: junior Art Greathouse at halfback, who ran for 437 yards last season, senior Alonzo Washington at fullback, who accumulated 450 rushing and receiving yards, and sophomore halfback Reggie McGill, who rushed for 232 yards as a true freshman.

And why not run? Arizona's offensive line is as strong as ever, anchored by pre-season All-America center Joe Tofflemire, a 6-3, 262 pound force. Surrounding the outstanding Tofflemire are the rather large Glenn Parker and Rob Woods at tackles.

Parker, a 6-6, 284 pound animal, and Woods, a 6-7, 264 pound bruiser give Tomey a formidable front behind which to run.

But let's not forget Arizona's most formidable weapon: senior wide receiver Derek Hill. A Tim Brown-type who returns kicks for big yardage, Hill ranked sixth in the nation last year in all-purpose yardage. USC coach Larry Smith calls Hill "the best receiver in the Pac-10".

On the defense, the Cats must adjust to the loss of All-American Chuck Cecil and six other starters. The unit will look to nose guard Dana Wells, the winner of the Morris Trophy as the conference's top defensive linemen, to lead a somewhat inexperienced crew.

But any questions that need answering will seem to flow Arizona's way this year. After all, a lot of things can go right when you're at home.

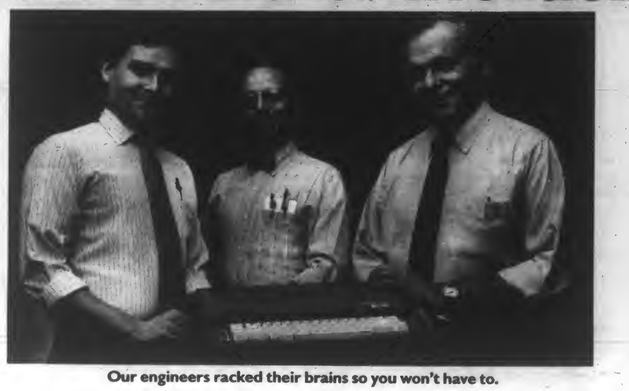
At Smith Corona, simplicity is the mother of invention.



Our engineers racked their brains so you won't have to.

We started out with a very simple idea.

To make electronic typewriters and word processors that have lots of great features but are very simple to use.

We make the simplest typewriters in memory.

So simple you don't have to keep one eye on your typing and one eye on the instruction manual.

So simple you don't need a degree in computer programming to operate them.

So simple they can even make a confirmed non-typist comfortable at the keyboard.

Call it human engineering if you like. Or call it ergonomics. Or call it plain old inspiration.

What we came up with is a line of remarkable typewriters that are sophisticated without being complicated.

In fact, they're unlike any other typewriters you've ever seen before... or used before...or muttered at before.

Take our new Smith Corona SD 700. (Lots of people are going to.)

We call the SD 700 the Memory Typewriter. You just may call it the simplest typewriter in memory.

It features a 7,000 character editable memory you can access with the mere flip of a switch.

Combined with the 16 character LCD display, you can proofread, correct and make changes before you ever put anything down on paper.

Of course, should you want to make changes on paper, we've made that simpler than ever too.

Give your typing a screen test.

On the SD 700, as well as on every new Smith Corona typewriter, you'll find our new correcting cassette.

It's easy-to-load and you can insert it in seconds.

There are no spools to unwind. No complicated threading. No tangles.

So now correcting mistakes is as easy as making them.

We've reformed the correction system.

Add features like a Spell-Right!™ 50,000 word electronic dictionary, WordFind,® WordEraser,® Full Line Correction and much more and you've got a typewriter that's not just incredibly simple to use, but simply impossible to pass up.

Of course, the same goes for every other Smith Corona typewriter and word processor as well.

Which is why we recommend that you hurry to your nearest store and try our machines yourself.

Obviously, they won't come to you.

Yet.

SMITH CORONA®

(the most in the conference along with Washington State), likely the most underrated quarterback in the nation calling the signals, and a schedule which includes easy non-conference prey such as Temple and Kansas, this could be a big year— by Cal's standards, mind you — in Berkeley.

Bruce Snyder, who was the offensive backfield coach for the Los Angeles Rams for four years before assuming the helm at Cal last year will return for his second year as head coach. In his first year, he experienced some success, although his final record of 3-6-2 (2-3-2 in the Pac-10) was not what he would have hoped for. Consider, though, that Cal was in third place in the conference before Taylor broke a finger near the end of the year and missed Cal's final two games.

As it turned out, Snyder and his squad wound up ranked the third most improved team in the nation by Football News.

Despite his injury, Taylor finished second in the conference in passing by throwing for over 2,000 yards and 18 touchdowns in only 9 games. In this year's season-opening thrashing of Pacific, Taylor started right where he left off as he completed 17 of 22 passes for 164 yards and a pair of touchdowns.

Rounding out the Bears' aerial attack is an abundance of receivers — a unit that is arguably the best in the conference.

Returning from last year are starters Mike Ford (33 receptions for 479 yards), Michael Smith, and junior college transfer Faasamala "Junior" Tagaloa, who led the nation in touchdown receptions last year. Also suiting up will be Vince Delgado and James Devers, who combined for 49 receptions in 1986, but sat out last season because of injuries. And if those guys fall down, Taylor can always dump the ball off to tight end Darryl Ingram, who had 30 catches for 416 yards last year.

But that is not all. The passing game can be set up by a balanced running attack, with last year's starting combination of Chris Richards at tailback and Todd Powers at fullback returning. Last year, Richards finished fifth in the conference in rushing yards with 668 yards on 157 carries and 8 touchdowns. Another promising factor for Cal fans is the emergence of freshman Tim Jenkins out of San Bernardino, who was the team's leading rusher in the UOP game with 96 yards on 20 carries.

So with a balanced offensive attack, the Bears are quite capable of posting a lot of points on the scoreboard. Whether or not the defense will keep them in the game remains a question. A few of those doubts were erased in the season opening 35-7 victory over Pacific, when the defense held the Tigers to 152 total yards.

But those questions were raised once again when the Bear defense surrendered ten late points in a stunning 17-16 loss to Oregon State at Corvallis on September 17.

One gaping hole that Snyder will have to fill is the one left by outside linebacker Ken Harvey, who graduated to the NFL via a first round pick of the Phoenix Cardinals.

Assuming Harvey's leadership role, however, will be senior nose guard Majett Whiteside, who has earned Pac-10 honors as a starter his three previous years. Also back is converted 234 passes for 1,834 yards, 13 touchdowns and eight interceptions. Brooks is not only excited by the development of Musgrave, but by his back-ups as well.

"The quarterback position is one of the deepest from a talent level," Brooks said. "We have four who are capable of playing well. All have good throwing arms and are mobile athletes. Bill Musgrave was an outstanding player as a freshman."

One thing is for sure. It didn't take Musgrave long to show Brooks and the rest of the conference that he doesn't believe in the sophomore jinx. In the 1988 season opener, a 49-0 thumping of Long Beach State, he completed 11 of 22 passes for 172 yards and three touchdowns with no interceptions. He followed that performance with a 17 of 29 effort for 206 yards and three more touchdowns in Oregon's 43-28 win over Washington State — good enough to earn him Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Week.

Although the Ducks are not as deep at the wideout position as last year, they still return with a few quality hands. The most dangerous is deep threat Terry Obee, a split end who led the Ducks in receiving last year with 33 receptions for 640 yards.

The Oregon ground attack should also be explosive with the return of its two leading rushers over the past two years in tailback Derek Loville and fullback Latin Berry. In the Long Beach crushing, Loville opened the season with a career-best day as he exploded for 154 yards and a pair of touchdowns in only 22 carries.

On defense there are seven returning starters from last year's unit. Last year the defense improved significantly as it climbed from the cellar in total defense to the middle of the pack. After the Ducks finished off Long Beach with their biggest margin of victory since 1973, it looks as if the defense is again a good one. The Duck defense held the 49ers to 108 total yards and only four completions in 17 attempts.

Oregon also limited Long Beach to only one first down in the second half. Including last year's stomping of Oregon State (44-0) in the season finale, the Ducks have posted back to back shutouts for the first time since 1964. If this is an indication of what Brooks can look forward to on defense, it just might be a bowl year in Oregon.

So with a strong returning squad, 1988 could be a good year for the Ducks. While Oregon should still be a middle of the pack team, many have predicted that possibly seven Pac-10 teams could be invited to bowl games this year. In other words, don't count the Ducks out.

outside linebacker Joel Dickson, who, after his move to defensive tackle, recorded eight sacks in the final four games. Another force on the defensive line will be Natu Tuatagaloa, who is considered a top pro prospect at tackle.

What remains to be seen is whether or not this is the year that Snyder and Taylor turn the tables on the losing Cal tradition. If they do, 1988 could be the year that this veteran team could start thinking of that sacred and almost unheard of phrase in Berkeley. A Bowl Game.

silver uniforms? The Cougs?

They're good. We swear it.

Just ask the Big 10. In the opening week of the season, second-year head coach Dennis Erickson took his team to Illinois where they pummeled the once-proud Illini, 47-7.

A fluke? The next week they went to Minnesota and buried the Gophers, 41-9.

So taken with this football fiesta was the school that the Washington State band greeted the team at the airport at 3 a.m. after the Minnesota game.

It's Cougar fever up in Pullman. One sports information employee at the university, when asked if the excitement was genuine, responded with an emphatic, "Whew! You better believe it!"

And if there's anyone to believe in, it just may be Erickson. After re-building the passing attack at Wyoming, he jumped ship to his alma mater and installed the wide-open "Air Erickson" attack.

The star pilot of this aerial attack is junior quarterback Timm Rosenbach, who, in the early going, has posted some very impressive numbers. He has completed 41 of 59 passes for 581 yards and seven touchdowns — numbers good enough to leave the Pullman community wondering if the Heisman committee should be looking at their man instead of a a certain quarterback in Westwood.

If Rosenbach has one flaw, though, it is the tendency to throw the interception. Erickson, however, discounts that to inexperience.

"Anytime you make a change (in offense) like that, it is a difficult change and I think that was very apparent last year in a lot of situations," Erickson said. "We will be a much better football team just because of a year of experience."

Experience? How about 20 returning starters in 1988 for the Cougs, a total matched in the conference only by Cal, another surprisingly strong team.

Leading the returners, along with Rosenbach, is junior tailback Steve Broussard, a second-team all-conference selection.

Broussard made his name mainly through the air, though, as he was a favorite target of Rosenbach's passes last year and wound up leading the conference in receptions with 59 for 701 yards.

Experience? How about Washington State's top six wide receivers returning, including 11-game starters Tim Stallworth and Victor Wood, who caught 44 passes between them.

Experience? How about the entire offensive line returning, led by the gargantuan Mike Utley (6-7, 302) a second-team all-conference pick last year.

But not all the news in Pullman is offensive. There is a defense, and a darn good one. Like the offense, it is a unit dominated by veterans.

The defensive line and secondary are the strength of the unit, with linemen Ivan Cook and Tony Savage and defensive backs Shawn Landrum, Ron Lee and Artie Holmes, all highly regarded.

Going into the season, Erickson knew he may have Washington State's best team in years. But he reserved some judgment saying, "We'll know just how good we are after the first four games next fall."

With a record crowd on hand in the first conference game against Oregon, Erickson had to know he had something special going.

mild concussion of knocking off the No. 6 team in the nation before losing 24-20 at the last minute?

The answer, it seems, is that you just can't figure. And that seems to be the larger theme at work when you consider this year's team: Stanford football '88 — You just can't figure.

Consider the fact that in the Daily Bruin's illustrious nine-member panel, the Cardinal was picked everywhere from fifth to ninth.

But this low ranking can be deceptive. The talent shortage at skill positions was shown to be greatly exaggerated when sophomore quarterback Brian Johnson — whose experience was largely in question coming into the season — completed 18 of 28 passes for 176 yards and two touchdowns against the Trojans. Johnson for all the world looked like the leader Stanford was searching for after the graduation of stallion running back Brad Muster to the NFL.

Unfortunately for the Cardinal, Johnson had his clock cleaned with seven minutes to go in the game and Stanford leading 20-17. He had to leave the game with a mild concussion. Consequently, the Stanford offense sputtered and died.

But Johnson is healthy now, after evening the Cardinal record to 1-1 with a 31-10 whipping of San Diego State. And the offensive line, like Arizona's, is among the conference's elite.

Like Arizona, too, the group is led by a talented and beefy center. Stanford's man in the middle is 6-3, 282 pound Andy Sinclair, a pre-season first-team All-America pick by the Sporting News. But Sinclair is not the be all and end all of the Cardinal line — he is joined by four other returning starters. Yes, that means the whole unit is comprised of returning starters.

Which will mean some nice running room for dynamo running back Jon Volpe, a 5-7 sparkplug whose running style puts one in mind of a bumper car ride at nearby Marriot's Great America. Volpe, as the Stanford media guide says, "seems to gain momentum after bouncing off people."

Elway is also stocked with a group of talented wide receivers, despite the loss of all-time great Jeff James. Wide receiver coach Dave Baldwin calls this group of receivers "the best I've had since I've been at Stanford."

Led by honors candidate Ed McCaffrey, a 6-6 junior who caught 30 passes for 533 yards last season, the group also includes 5-10 speed burner Walter Batson (4.4 forty), experience in seniors Henry Green and Spencer Cotten, and a strong possession-type receiver in 6-3, 200 junior Steve Sullens.

So throw all this together — a strong line, a lot of quality wide receivers, a decent running game and the mind of Jack Elway — and you get the new Stanford offense this year, the run-and-shoot. Or what Elway calls "what looks like" the run-and-shoot. A quasi-run-and-shoot.

The offense features receivers as far as the eye can see running around the field like chickens with their heads cut off. But it works, as evidenced by the near-upset on the Farm against USC and the romp over the Aztecs.

On the other side of the ball, the heart of the defense lies in the line, led by honors candidates Lester Archambeau (6-5, 255), a junior defensive end who is considered a fierce pass something more — their head coach.

When Earle Bruce left Ohio State, the Buckeyes looked to the west and called upon Cooper to fill the void. Arizona State, of course, needed to look no further than its own organization for a replacement, which was loaded with great coaching possibilities. So eight days after Cooper's departure, the Sun Devils turned to defensive coordinator Larry Marmie and announced he would call the shots from now on.

What a break this is for loyal Sun Devil fans. Not only do they "get rid of" Cooper, but they pick up one of college football's most unknown coaches. This should lead to a big change in Tempe. And it should break the winning tradition of Cooper, who left behind a 25-9-1 record in three seasons (which ranks right behind UCLA for best in the conference in that period), and three bowl game appearances in that span.

When speaking about calling the shots, Marmie shook up the football world and revolutionized his position as he said, "The actual coaching is the part I enjoy the most. The time on the field is my favorite time of the day. I want players to know Coach Marmie is aware if they aren't performing a drill properly."

Things don't look too good for Mr. Marmie as he has a big task on his shoulders in trying to replace the 11 starters who have completed their tenure at ASU, including six who were first-team All-Pac-10. But with his experience as head coach — none whatsoever — it should be a smooth drop to the depths of the competitive Pac-10 division for the Sun Devils.

It's a good thing that Oregon State and the not-so-up-and-coming Lamar University (of the American South Conference) is on Arizona State's schedule so that Marmie's record won't look that pitiful.

Yes, it is a problem when you don't have a reliable person who can throw the ball, an offensive line that rarely gives him enough time, a receiver who has caught more than 18 passes from last season or a running back who has totaled more than 250 yards in a season.

But that is only on the offensive side.

On the other line of scrimmage, there is a similar lack of bodies. All four of last year's starting defensive linemen have completed their stay. As a result, this year's line is a green line.

So, to say the least, Marmie has a no-lose, no-win situation on his hands. He can't lose his job because no matter how good a coach he is he can't win with the line-up he'll be playing.

One 'possible' plus for the Sun Devils is the return of quarterback Daniel Ford. However, if last year is any indication (Ford completed 112 of 227 passes for a .498 percentage and threw 14 interceptions with just 11 touchdowns), then Marmie could be drawing quarterbacks out of a hat. But they say Ford has potential to be a good quarterback and he proved that in the team's confidence-building opening season 21-16 victory over Illinois. Ford posted solid numbers in throwing for 180 yards on 17-25 passing. He also threw a touchdown with no interceptions.

Regarding Ford, Marmie stated, "We're certainly happy that Daniel is back. We want him to become a more consistent Beavers will finish higher than ninth?

You want the truth?

No.

When one considers the 1988 Beavers, thoughts must obviously turn to Wilhelm, a left-handed senior who already ranks eighth on the all-time yardage list of Pac-10 quarterbacks. He is a talent.

Outside of Wilhelm, well. . .there's Wilhelm. But what about. . .well, there's always Wilhelm.

In other words, there ain't much brewing up in Corvallis this year.

Which is kind of a shame. Because Kragthorpe seems like such a nice guy. The Beaver media guide has a nice little tribute to the man written by his son, Kurt, a sportswriter. He paints a picture of a guy who really cares and really tries hard.

And he seems like a really great father, too.

He might not be such a bad coach, either. He is genuinely trying to install the "Air Express" offense that he pledged would change OSU football when taking the job in 1984 after working much of the same at BYU as an offensive coordinator and Idaho State as head coach. And it's not such a futile effort.

To Kragthorpe's credit, the back-to-back 3-8 seasons registered by OSU in 1985 and 1986 were the first time since 1970-71 that the Beavers were able to win three or more games in one season back-to-back.

To the further credit of Kragthorpe, the Beavs led the conference in passing offense last year and ranked tenth in the nation.

Unfortunately, a passing game does not a quality team make. Especially in the Pac-10.

That's the thing with the Beavs. They really aren't that bad. It's just that they play in such a tough conference. It isn't exactly easy to recruit against schools like Washington and UCLA for West Coast talent.

As a result, OSU often loses out on top recruits. Result: less talent.

And that lack of talent is manifested in two key areas: the OSU offensive line and the entire defense.

Even Kragthorpe admits that the offensive line is a unit that "we are kind of retooling a little." The line lost three important seniors and is a large question mark coming in.

And then there's the defense. For which there is no defense. Last year, the Beavs were dead last in total defense and scoring defense, allowing opponents a whopping 39.4 points a game and 462 yards per game.

Hmmm, what a hallowed tradition of thwarting opponents.

Via those appalling numbers, one can also see how the OSU passing game is negated every autumnal Saturday.

So who is going to try to turn all that around this year?

First off, Kragthorpe has switched the base defense from 4-3 to 3-4 and juggled a few names and positions. Senior safety Andre Harris, one of the rare well-regarded players on the defense, will be back in his old slot. His backfield mate Teddy Johnson, who led the Pac-10 in interceptions this year, has been moved to strong safety from cornerback.

But the defense is not much to brag about. Consider that last year, Oregon State was the only school in the conference that did performer. We hope that his experience can become maturity."

On the defensive side, only defensive end Saute Sapolu returns with any experience up front (he started two games last year), so Marmie will get to test his young recruits early.

When looking at the defensive line, Marmie stated, "We're concerned about depth and lack of experience up front. As you look across that line you see only Sapolu with any experience."

But the new coach is putting all his trust in his lone returnee's ability by saying, "He's a veteran and he should have a great year for us."

So now that Cooper has left for Ohio State, and 11 starters have departed, Marmie hasn't been left with that much to work with. But you never know what can happen with a new coach. It's not as if he has no returning starters. He is blessed — or is it cursed? — with Ford to lead the offense, and Sapolu to anchor down the trenches on defense.

Basically, its a rebuilding year for the Sun Devils. Then again, maybe they should consider rebuilding a new stadium in some other secluded desert. And hire a new coach as well.

rusher, and senior nose guard Ray Huckestein (6-2, 265). The third line position may be a problem for the Card.

The linebacking corps, with the likes of fifth-year senior Kevin Richardson, who led the team in tackles last year with 113, sophomore Jono Tunney, and honors candidate Rob Hinckley (6-5, 245), figures to be solid.

Tunney, a 6-2, 235 pound inside 'backer out of Mill Valley, is a particularly fierce hitter who once painted a geometrically perfect Blue Oyster Cult symbol on his boyhood bedroom wall. On your feet? He'll put you on your knees.

So with all this talent, where does the Daily Bruin get off picking them ninth in the conference? Well, who knows if the USC game was a fluke? Who knows if the quasi-run-and-shoot will hold up against UCLA and Notre Dame, teams lingering on the Cardinal schedule? And it's a really tough conference this year.

not land a single player on the all-conference first or second defensive teams.

There are some respectable aspects to the Beavers. They have one of the conference's best tight ends in junior Phil Ross, who caught 56 passes last season.

The wide receivers are also a good crew. The Beavers return senior Robb Thomas, who led the team with 58 catches and senior Bryant Hill, a longhair who made some big catches for Kragthorpe last year.

And, hey, the Beavers have already won two games this year, beating San Jose State and Cal.

Maybe the Daily Bruin is way off on all this last-place nonsense. Maybe the Beavers will begin paving the long road back.

After all, Kragthorpe is such a nice guy.

Then again, we all know where nice guys tend to finish.

Big in Japan

The UCLA women's golf team, along with the University of Tulsa women's team, traveled to Fukushima, Japan to compete in the USA-Japan Friendship Tournament September 20 and 21.

The Bruin women were selected to participate due to their steady finishes at Nationals over the past years (UCLA finished 12th last year). Also taked into consideration is that UCLA returns four players and adds an impressive newcomerfor the 1988-89 season.

Making the trip for the Bruins will be juniors Paige Wery and Jean Zedlitz, sophomores Debbi Koyama and LaRee Sugg, newcomer Christy Erb and UCLA head coach Jackie Tobian-Steinmann.

Sting, Gabriel lead tour for human rights

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

It was everything anyone could have expected, and more. At the end of Amnesty International's "Human Rights Now!" concert at the L.A. Coliseum, there was little doubt as to rock 'n' roll's power to unite people.

Of course, this was far more than a mere rock show. Celebrating the 40th anniversary of the Declaration of Human Rights — which states "all human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights" — this world tour is both the most ambitious and most artistically-satisfying ever put together.

It is difficult to think of an array of performers more committed to their art and convictions than Youssou N'Dour, Tracy Chapman, Peter Gabriel, Sting, and Bruce Springsteen.

In the cool gathering dusk, special guest Joan Baez delivered heartfelt renditions of "Imagine," "Let It Be," the gospel-tinged "Oh! Freedom," and Bob Marley's "No Woman No Cry." Baez's soaring, exquisite vocals set the mood for an uplifting evening underscoring awareness and solidarity with the world's "prisoners of conscience."

"Their worst fear is being forgotten," said Baez. "That no one will save them."

From Senegal came the vibrant, highly-percussive African music of Youssou N'Dour: a 45-minute showcase of colorful, polyrhythmic music, punctuated by N'Dour's swooping chants.

Tracy Chapman, a singer with a small track record but a lot of soul, followed. Accompanied by only her guitar, Chapman sang most of the tracks from her self-

Amnesty and rock 'n' roll: powerful mix

By Kevin J. Messick
Off-Campus Editor

When the first two hundred letters came, the guards gave me back my clothes. Then the next two hundred letters came, and the prison director came to see me. When the next pile of letters arrived, the director got in touch with his superior. The letters kept coming and coming: three thousand of them. The President was informed. The letters still kept arriving, and the President called the prison and told them to let me go.

—A released prisoner of conscience from the Dominican Republic

It's truly amazing how close you can feel to thousands of people at a concert: a communal feeling often absent from mega-events in mega-stadiums; a feeling that everybody is tuned-in and turned-on at the same time; a feeling that lasts long after the show is over.

Last Wednesday night in Los Angeles Memorial Coliseum, Amnesty International's "Human Rights Now!" concert had music, a message — and that feeling.

Amnesty is helping to foster this feeling all over the world as part of its effort to ensure wider respect for fundamental human rights, most notably through its two musical tours.

In the wake of rock's active involvement in world events, Amnesty's "Human Rights Now!" tour has emerged as the most ambitious effort, covering over 35,000 miles between London and Buenos Aires. It follows in the steps of Amnesty's successful 1986 "Conspiracy of Hope" concerts, which traveled across the United States.

What's playing in town

By Jim Pickrell, Staff Writer

The following is a list of some of the movies that are playing locally. Don't forget, if you decide to check one of them out, you can get half-price tickets down at the Central Ticket Office in the James West Center. They keep banker's hours, so you have to plan in advance. Westwood has some of the world's best theaters, but they are also among the most expensive, running a dollar or two more than first-run theaters in Seattle or Peoria.

★★★★★: An incredible work of art that will change your life. ★★★★: Good stuff, go see it. ★★★: Average. ★★: Not worth seeing unless you are really bored and have too much money. ★: No redeeming value.

Moon Over Parador

Richard Dreyfuss stars in a comedy set in the fictional country of Parador. A little like the "Three Stooges go to Honduras," only two of them stayed home. There are a few scenes that are extremely funny, but the film fails to really make contact with the subject matter (politics in banana republics), and while there is a great deal of good silliness, Dreyfuss and Mazursky take acting too seriously to push this story (about an actor posing as a Third World dictator) to the limit. ★★★½

Patty Hearst

The story of Patty Hearst viewed from the inside, based on Hearst's book. Directed by Paul Schrader in a very claustrophobic, almost theatrical style. He also wrote such classics as Taxi Driver and Raging Bull, as well as the controversial Last Temptation of Christ. Patty Hearst was abducted by terrorists in the mid-1970s, then later joined them in several robberies. The question in the minds of the media at the time was: after being brain-washed for several months, was Patty Hearst still responsible for her actions? ★★★½

Eight Men Out

John Sayles' latest film about the scandal surrounding the fixing of the 1919 World Series. More than that, it is the story of a group of young men playing a game for boys in the world of adults. Pushed from every direction, cheated and exploited by Red Sox owner Charles Comiskey, they were one of the best teams in history. Money plays only a partial role in their motivation for agreeing to drop a couple of games, yet in the end they find they have betrayed the only thing they really cared about. There have been a lot of baseball movies out lately, but this one is something more. Highly recommended. ★★★★★

Border Radio

In this film made by ex-UCLA film students Allison Anders, Dean Lent, and Kurt Voss, a rock musician (played by local musician Chris D.) escapes to Ensenada after engaging in petty theft from a sleazeball promoter who owed him some money, leaving his wife behind trying to find out what happened. Also features John Doe from X. Elevates Cinema Blanc Trash to almost a form of art. Almost. Although influenced by the German New Wave of Cinema (Wim Wenders), some of the improvisational stuff drags, and could have benefited from a tighter screenplay. I mean, that's why you

Comedies lead summer's 18 biggest films

By Kevin J. Messick, Off-Campus Editor

■ Box office revenues are totals reflecting the period between May 20-September 5, as reported in Daily Variety.

Who Framed Roger Rabbit $130,686,435

■ 1. Who Framed Roger Rabbit?

The number one summer box-office hit came from Disney's Touchstone Pictures in association with Steven Spielberg's Amblin Entertainment. It was director Robert Zemeckis' first film since his 1985 comedy Back to the Future. Combining state-of-the-art animation with live action, Who Framed Roger Rabbit? tells a story of mayhem and murder, of down-on-his-luck detective Eddie Valiant (Bob Hoskins) and the rabbit he's trying to protect in the latest scandal in Toon-Town. Eddie and Roger, an odd couple in every sense, find themselves in one extraordinary situation after another. One of the film's best-known sequences is the off-screen personality of Maroon Studio's top toon Baby Herman, that of a cigar-smoking vulgarian with a voice like Wallace Beery. The largest assemblage of animated personalities ever presented in one film, an accomplishment that took some eight years to bring to the screen, Roger Rabbit is well deserving of it place on top of this summer's films.

Coming to America $117,382,908

■ 2. Coming To America

Close behind at number two is Hollywood's number one box-office star Eddie Murphy, teamed up for the second time with Trading Places director John Landis. The tale of a mythical African prince who comes to New York in search of a bride, Coming to America at the very least heralded the motion-picture debut of comedian Arsenio Hall as Eddie's royal, loyal friend while filling Paramount's coffers with yet another of Murphy's financial goldmines. Murphy and Hall, who at one point in the film portray six different characters simultaneously, have churned out a pic intended for pure comedic entertainment. This means that while it may be good for a few laughs, you remember very little about the film by the time you reach the parking lot.

Eddie and Arsenio upon being notified that a cartoon rabbit beat their movie at the box office.

Michael J. "Crocodile" Dundee enjoys a night on the town in Westwood.

Crocodile Dundee II $107,214,324

■ 3. Crocodile Dundee II

Crocodile Dundee, the highest grossing film of 1986 ($400 million worldwide), doubled E.T.'s box-office record in Australia and set new ones from Stockholm to Sweden. It was bound to have a sequel. Paul Hogan, who successfully beckoned more than 600,000 tourists to come down under, had no problem packin' thousands more into theaters for further adventures of Mick Dundee. Hogan has since disappeared into the Australian outback with no plans to make Croc III. "Like the devil, I sell good times," says the one-time rigger on Sydney's harbor bridge, who does seem to have made a pact with the dark prince as everything he touches turns to commercial gold. But what "Hoges" will touch next, nobody knows.

Jose Quintero directs O'Neill

Playwright's birth centennial marked

By Stella Mittelbach
Contributor

Jose Quintero is bringing the ecstasy of Eugene O'Neill's plays to Southern California, which has virtually ignored the centennial of the birth of perhaps America's greatest playwright.

Our region seems to have forgotten O'Neill (1888-1953) by offering no stage productions for the centennial while O'Neill festivals have sprung up all over the United States and the world, from Stockholm to Beijing.

Sea Waves: KCRW Radio Tribute

The director, considered America's foremost O'Neill interpreter, is getting Los Angeles into the celebration by creating radio productions of some of O'Neill's early plays including the cycle The S.S.Glencairn: Four Plays of the Sea. They began airing on KCRW (89.9 FM) Sept. 7 and will conclude Wednesday with The Long Voyage Home (2:30 p.m.).

Quintero, who lost his vocal cords to cancer in 1986, speaks with an instrument that picks up vibrations in his throat. He has directed 17 O'Neill stage productions since he began his "uninterrupted relationship with O'Neill" 33 years ago, he said as he sat in the sunny living room of his Griffith park-area home recently.

Two half-hour radio documentaries entitled "Jose Quintero Directs O'Neill" followed his work as he shaped the radio series. In addition, the Tony Award-winning director has published his memoirs, If You Don't Dance They Beat You, tracing his four decades in the theater. He is also currently doing a radio production of O'Neill's The Hairy Ape for National Public Radio. Eventually, Quintero hopes to produce all the O'Neill plays he has not yet directed for NPR.

"I had no idea how powerful and brilliant a play The Hairy Ape (airing date to be announced) is until I started to work on it," said the director. "In reading it I thought it was a very interesting experiment. I was not prepared for the enormous emotional dramatic force that it contains."

'Dear America' takes honest look at war

By I. Nordstrom, Staff Writer

I tell you truthfully I doubt if I'll come out of this alive. In my original squad, I'm the only one left alive . . . Seems every day another young guy, 18 or 19 years old like myself is killed in action . . . See ya if it's God's will.
— Letter from Ray Griffiths, Marine Private, read in Dear America. Griffiths was killed on July 4, 1966, at age 19.

Vietnam remains a haunting spectre because it has not been buried, not been put to rest. Before that can happen, it will have to be confronted, and America has not rushed to look the Vietnam reality in the face. Denial and mass amnesia have kept the Vietnam War a closeted secret, locked away with other painful or shameful skeletons.

If it took 12 years for Congress to vote Vietnam vets an official day of recognition (What day is it? Do we really recognize it?), if the memorial originally planned for the dead bore no mention of the war they died in, and if the issue can still ruffle a Quayle's feathers, the war has not been put to rest.

Dear America: Letters Home from Vietnam, co-produced by The Vietnam Veterans Ensemble Theatre Company (originally shown on Home Box Office, now in theaters) is one of American cinema's first honest looks at the war. Unflinching and uncompromising, it takes the audience into battle as well as boot camp, and seldom — I wish I could say never — shies from controversial issues like patriotism, protest and responsibility.

An unrelenting chronicle of despair and tragedy, Dear America is, as I think any war documentary must be, a pacifist's film; the horrors that unwind on its reels are so moving that the pain of war becomes an undeniable testament to the futility of fighting.

Dear America is powerful in its simplicity. Letters home from soldiers are read with news footage from the front lines in Vietnam and the political battlegrounds in the U.S. as backdrop. The voice-over narration is provided by professional actors (Robert De Niro, Tom Berenger and Martin Sheen among them) who manage to remain undistractingly anonymous while still infusing the letters with emotion.

Don't let people's first impression of you this semester be that you're a NERD.

During the next 6 weeks you can see for 45% less!

And look great while you're doing it!

Let's face it, it costs a lot of money to look good. Did you notice last time you were in a store how much everything that makes you look good costs? It's a fortune. A pair of pants can easily costs more than $100.00. So what's the answer? Not walk around in a pair of pants? We don't think so. You can always go to a discount store and find a pair of pants for $25.00, but is that pair of pants going to make you look your best?

Designers spend millions of dollars a year in advertising, simply to promote their name and creating a demand for it so you'll buy whatever it is they happen to be promoting at the time. Because they spend so much money promoting their name, their products usually costs more. After all they have to make back all the money they're spending on advertising somewhere. Why spend $100.00 on designer pants when you can get something similar for less? But how similar are the off brands? Initially they seem very similar in color, fabric, style, until you try them on. You may not notice the difference at once, but walk in them for awhile. Subtlety is everything. Most of the time the fabric feels different, as well as the cut. The designer pants do make you look and feel better.

Based on this discussion you'd think we are trying to sell you on designer pants. We're not. We are trying to make available to you the best deal in this entire issue of the Daily Bruin and it has absolutely nothing to do with pants. It is however only for people who want to look their best for a long time.

And now - the best offer in this issue of the Daily Bruin, for people who don't have 20/20 vision.

Like everything else, the price of eyeglasses have gone up. But what specifically has caused the price of eyeglasses to rise like they have? The answer: the beautiful - stylish - designer frames. These frames noticeably make you look so much better when you try them on in the store, especially in comparison with all the non-designer frames that cause you to cringe when looking in the mirror. This is not to say that every designer frame is going to make you look your best. That's why designers have several styles, some even have completely different lines of frames. But the top designers know what they're doing. If you do not look better wearing their product you will not spend the additional money that it costs. The end result would be that they would go out of business.

Even though these frames make you look so great - you might settle for something not has flattering. Why? One reason only.....Price.

Now you can look great at almost 1/2 the cost. For the next 6 weeks the Spec Gallery is offering a one time special to Students, their families, and all employees of UCLA.

Every frame in the store will be 45% of their retail price when you buy a pair of glasses. This offer is unlimited as to the number of pairs of glasses you can buy, as long as it is within 6 weeks of the date this insure of the paper is published.

The Spec Gallery in Santa Monica carries the finest selection of designer eyeglass frames on the Westside. Among the American and European frames they carry in stock are: Marchon, LaCoste, Oakley, Berdel, Cazel, LA Eyeworks, Neo Style, Bolle' and literally hundreds of others.

The Spec Gallery has their own on-site laboratory that permits them to grind their own lenses on the premises. This enables them to offer everything from prescription swim goggles, to bi-focals for computer and word processor users. They also offer all types of coatings for your lenses such as anti-scratch, UV, and anti-reflection. In other words, The Spec Gallery can make your glasses exactly to your specifications, in your selection of designer frames for 45% off!

Important Note

The Spec Gallery only carries the finest in designer frames and lenses. If you are looking for something other than the nicesest looking, finest quality glasses, please look somewhere else.

An added bonus for you to save you even more money!

If you order your glasses within the next six weeks, beside receiving the 45% of the list price of every frame in the store the Spec Gallery will save you even more money. Every pair of glasses that you purchase will be tinted free of charge. That's right, no hidden clauses, no special conditions. Every pair of glasses that you order within the next 6 weeks will be tinted completely and unconconditionally free. That's the entire offer. We want you to know that this offer is not a gimmick. There are no hidden costs involved when you come in to order. In fact, the only thing that you're paying full price for are the lenses, and because we do that ourselves they're already low in price.

Why are we almost giving the glasses away to you?

When the owner of the Spec Gallery was a college student about 20 years ago. He didn't own a pair of designer glasses. In fact he was so broke that during one quarter he walked around campus with his nosepiece taped together. It ruined his social life, and gave him the inspiration to do what he's doing today.

He vowed that someday he would help other students not have their social life ruined because they wore glasses. For the next six weeks he intends to keep that promise.

Tom Hanks, Robert Loggia dance to the tune of almost $100 million this summer

■ 4. Big

Tom Hanks firmly established himself this summer as a major screen star in his role as Josh Baskin, the 12-year-old boy in the body of a 35-year-old man in Twentieth Century Fox's comedy-romance hit Big. Although the prospects of yet another body-switching pic appeared dim (recent predecessors include Like Father, Like Son, 18 Again, and Vica-Versa), Hanks brings Big far above the others with his brilliant, endearing performance as a toy company executive with the mind of a child. And in a break from steamy sexual encounters in limos, elevators and kitchen sinks, Hanks' romance with Elizabeth Perkins is funny, touching and all above the sheets (at least from what's shown on screen). Look forward to Hanks' upcoming Columbia flick Punch Line with Sally Field as a pair of struggling stand-up comedians.

TV star-turned-wine-cooler-salesman Willis makes a comeback in 'Die Hard.'

Die Hard

■ 5. Die Hard

Bruce Willis suprised a lot of people this summer, as he regained credibility at the box office following his flop Sunset. Brought to you by the same folks behind last year's actioner Predator, Willis takes on his first dramatic role as NYC Policeman John McClane, who becomes the only hope for a small group of hostages trapped in a L.A. high-rise on Christmas Eve. A very slick production, combined with David Addison-type one-liners from Willis, makes for great Saturday afternoon entertainment as McClane battles the latest Euro-trash terrorists on top of the Century City Fox Building. Yeah, it's a little mundane, but every movie 'aint supposed to be a thought-provoking masterpiece. Die Hard also marks the screen debut of Alan Rickman as the cool and calculating head terrorist Hans Gruber. Rickman was nominated for a Tony Award as Best Actor on Broadway for Les Liaisons Dangereuses. Willis will go for the dramatic again in the upcoming Warner Brothers pic In Country.

Hollywood Bowl ends summer season with a bang

By J.D.Wolverton
Senior Staff Writer

■ CONCERTS: The Hollywood Bowl Summer Festival. Sept. 7 — Jazz at the Bowl concert. With Joe Williams, Doc Severinsen and the Tonight Show Band, the Count Basie Orchestra under the direction of Frank Foster, and vocalist Carmen Bradford. Sept. 9th — Music for Films. With John Williams conducting the Philharmonic. Sept. 13 — The Los Angeles Philharmonic, with Andre Previn conducting. Sept. 14 — Jazz at the Bowl concert. With Pete Fountain, clarinet, Lionel Hampton and his Orchestra, and vocalist Ernestine Anderson.

John Williams conducting L.A. Philharmonic

A wonderful two-months of music-making in Los Angeles concluded last week as the Hollywood Bowl wound up another very successful summer season.

There was something for just about every taste scheduled for the final two weeks — what with two great jazz concerts headlining some of the most dynamic musicians around today, an evening of classic and contemporary film music, and L.A. Philharmonic music director Andre Previn on the podium in a program of beloved classical favorites.

Doc Severinsen and the Tonight Show Band shared a double bill with the fabled Count Basie Orchestra, which came on in the second half of the Sept. 7th program. Vocalist Carmen Bradford belted out some great old tunes like "A Foggy Day in London Town," and Joe Williams, with a singing style comparable to Cab Calloway's, was in top form with songs like "Honeysuckle Rose" and "Ain't No Use."

The Count Basie Orchestra, under the direction of saxophonist Frank Foster since Basie's death, were at their finest for this listener in the Eric Dixon arrangement of the Dizzy Gillespie classic "A Night in Tunisia."

It was an experience to hear the Tonight Show band in a live concert after seeing them on television so often. Doc came on in one of his patented flashy suits, a red one this time, with twinkling diamond buttons. The talents of Tommy Newsom, ribbingly dubbed "Mr. Excitement of the Music Business" by Severinsen, were showcased by his pleasing arrangement of "Stardust" and some fine work on lead alto sax. He also made the most of a solo spot in Duke Ellington's "Do Nothin' Till You Hear From Me." Tenor sax man Pete Christlieb shone in a solo from "There'll Never Be Another You."

John Williams has attained a greater degree of public recognition than probably any other film composer in history as the author of the scores for a string of box office hits including Star Wars and Jaws. He is also kept busy as the conductor of the legendary Boston Pops Orchestra, to which post he succeeded Arthur Fiedler.

Jazz legend Lionel Hampton

Williams programmed a concert which featured some of his familiar music — excerpts from Superman and Close Encounters — as well as an example of his lesser-known work, a suite of the music from Jane Eyre. The concert's second half was devoted to classic tunes from Hollywood musical films written by the likes of Kern, Berlin and Loewe, and an excerpt from David Raskin's memorable score for Laura. The Philharmonic entered into the spirit of the music under Williams' sure direction, and the audience was very reluctant to see the program end. Williams mollified them with several encores.

Andre Previn took the podium of his orchestra in the last two weeks of the season, after having been away on other engagements for most of the summer. He led the Philharmonic in a superbly-played program on Sept. 13, featuring Debussy's Prelude to The Afternoon of a Faun, Mozart's Concerto in C minor for Piano and Or-

Actor's dream fulfills in fun, unconvincing 'Parador'

Raul Julia, Richard Dreyfuss and Sonia Braga

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

■ FILM: Moon over Parador. Written by Paul Mazursky and Leon Capetanos. Directed by Mazursky. With Richard Dreyfuss, Raul Julia, Sonia Braga, and Jonathan Winters.

Moon Over Parador, directed by Paul Mazursky (back from recent successes with Moscow on the Hudson and Down and Out in Beverly Hills), is the story of Jack Noah, a successful New York actor who is roped into a scheme to temporarily step in and take the place of the alcoholic dictator of Parador, a small Carribean island country.

It's a light, enjoyable movie with a good premise and fun characters, although it doesn't fully exploit the promise of the material, and ends up more a collection of gags than a meaningful story.

Richard Dreyfuss steps right into the role of the duplicate dictator — as a very serious actor himself, he seems natural in the part. But he and Mazursky (an actor himself, Mazursky even makes a cameo as the dictator's mother) have a hard time seeing the actor as anything less than a great artist. It would have been fun to take a few pot shots at flake-o actors too.

In fact, this is a common problem for a lot of Hollywood people who've been in the business too long: they can't imagine life for anyone who isn't in the movie business, so that even when they redo a combination of the stories of Bananas and The Prince and the Pauper, they have to revolve it around themselves.

Raul Julia is solid in the part of Robert Strassman, the neo-Nazi manipulator of Paradoran politics who brings in Dreyfuss as a substitute for the deceased dictator. He is cold, shrewd, and has such an air of intelligence and ambition about him that we wonder why he doesn't just step

Classic 'Eight Men Out' relates Black Sox scandal

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

■ FILM: Eight Men Out. Written and directed by John Sayles. From the novel by Eliot Asinof. With John Cusack, Clifton James, Michael Lerner, Christopher Lloyd, Charlie Sheen, David Strathairn, and D.B. Sweeney. A Sanford/Pillsbury production.

As Jackson departed from the Grand Jury room, a small boy clutched at his sleeve and tagged along after him.
"Say it ain't so, Joe,", he pleaded. "Say it ain't so."
"Yes, kid, I'm afraid it is," Jackson replied.
"Well, I never would have thought it," the boy replied.
—Chicago Herald Examiner, Sept. 30th, 1920.

The "Black Sox," as the team became known, were probably the greatest collection of players ever to take the field. From Shoeless Joe Jackson, who couldn't read or write, but batted over .400, and Eddie Cicotte, a leading pitcher but only a year or two from retirement, to Hap Felsch, Buck Weaver, Chick Gandil, and Eddie Collins, they were heavy favorites to win the 1919 World Series — but ended up being banned from baseball for life in the biggest scandal ever to hit the game.

The players were promised over $200,000 by gamblers, but only a fraction was ever delivered, and money played only a partial role in their motivation in conspiring to throw the Series to the Cincinnati Reds.

Charles Comiskey, former first baseman and manager for the St. Louis Browns, built the Chicago team up from scratch, but was notorious for his cheapness when it came to player salaries. Despite their record, his players were the lowest-paid in the league, and had no recourse when he cancelled bonuses and reneged write it out in the first place, isn't it? If Boeing built airplanes by inspirational improvising on the assembly line, I'd worry, and film-making is not that different. Still, the film has a certain amount of style and a genuinely good soundtrack. ★★★★★ (Though one or two of those might be bonus points just because they're from UCLA.)

The Last Temptation of Christ

Neither as controversial as the distributors would have you think, nor as sacrilegious as the lunatic fringe believes, this movie explores the dual nature of Christ as man and God. A bit on the long side at 2 ½ hours, but interesting. This film is unique among a lot of the stuff that has come out recently — it's actually about something. ★★★★

The Deceivers

The story of William Savage (Pierce Brosnan), a low-level administrator for the British East India company in the early 1800's, who stumbles upon the existence of a bizarre cult group called the "Thugees" (deceivers). Based on John Masters' novel, the movie is a fictionalized account of the real-life exploits of William Sleeman, the British officer who led the effort in the 1820's to expose and destroy the Thugees, a secret and widespread cult whose members are estimated to have ritually murdered and robbed more than two million Indians over a period of three hundred years. Directed by Nicholas Meyer (The Wrath of Khan) and produced by Merchant Ivory (Room With a View); the film starts out feeling like a BBC production of Gunga Din but tends more and more toward the psychedelic as Savage becomes involved in the drug-induced violence and rituals of the Thugees. ★★★

Someone To Love

Orson Welles was getting senile, so that's his excuse, but I don't know what the rest of these people are doing in this film which rambles on a lot about relationships. Does 90 minutes of film stock mean you have a movie? Bleah. ★

Wings of Desire

Winner of the Best Director award at Cannes last year, Wings of Desire represents a return to the classic art film — the kind of thing that never has and never will come out of mainstream Hollywood. It's the story of an angel in Berlin who becomes enchanted with the sensations of everyday life: the daydreams of housewives and the games of children, the reminiscences of an old Jewish writer. But most of all, he is captivated by the vitality of a French Trapeze artist in a struggling one-ring circus, until he finally decides to give up immortality for a chance to sense, feel, and love. German director Wim Wenders, whose earlier films include Paris Texas, Kings of the Road, and Hammet, has put together a fascinating film that is more a collage of images and poetry than a story. One thing that American audiences will find startling is the presence of Peter Falk (Columbo) in a secondary role, drinking cups of coffee at fast food places, wandering around in his trench coat, and generally being himself. Berlin is a fascinating locale, and this film, which violates every basic rule of Hollywood filmmaking, is either a tremendous bore or a fascinating work of art, depending on your point of views. I liked it. ★★★★

Married to the Mob

The story of Angela DeMarco (Michelle Pfeiffer), a good natured air-head married to a moderately successful second-string mobster. When her husband is killed in a sleazeball adult-motel, she decides it's time to leave town, unaware that her every move is being watched by nerdy FBI agent Mike Downey. And he's not the only one. The Mob is her family, and they're not ready to let her go. The film is charming and amusing, if you don't mind a little cartoon mafia violence. In fact, the whole film has a cartoon quality to it: the characters are stylized, the colors are bright, bold, and the production design theme all the way through is kitsch. Director Demme has

Cocktail

■ 6. Cocktail
Young, confident and ambitious Brian Flanagan (Tom Cruise) always dreamed of a career that would bring him power, excitement and quick personal profit — the exact same motivations behind Disney's Touchstone execs that green-lighted this superficial Cruise smile-fest. But as the sixth-biggest summer movie, it's simple to see why they made it. Swept up in the seductive world of easy money and sex as a bartender on Manhattan's Upper East Side, Cruise cruises through this poorly written pic, which lags behind today's attitudes toward personal responsibility and integrity (some of Cruise's worst macho lines even elicited boos from many L.A. audiences). What director Roger Donaldson (No Way Out) does get across is the glib gospel of bartending according to Doug Coughlin (Bryan Brown, currently in Gorillas in the Mist), but we learn very little else. Certain not to hurt mega-star Cruise's screen attraction, Cocktail remains below par to Top Gun and The Color of Money. Though number six on the summer list, Cocktail is the hands-down winner for the dumbest tagline "When he pours, he reigns." Look for better stuff from Cruise opposite Dustin Hoffman in UA's upcoming Rainman.

Pretty-boy Cruise cruises to big bucks in 'Cocktail.'

Willow

■ 7. Willow
Master storyteller George Lucas (Star Wars, Indiana Jones) joined forces with director Ron Howard (Cocoon, Splash) to form a seemingly unbeatable combination for this fantasy-adventure. But although Willow was a definite winner in its own right at the summer B.O., many people still think this film was a disappointment because it didn't financially live up to Lucas' previous hits (or sufficiently surpass its $40 million pricetag). Filled with epic adventure, action and danger, Willow tells the tale of Willow Ufgood (Warwick Davis) and his unlikely ally, skid row warrior Madmartigan (Val Kilmer), in a typical Lucas tale of good vs. evil. Complete with fire-breathing monsters, wicked queens, and two 9-inch high comical brownies, Willow is more than just family entertainment if you're into fantasy flicks.

Photographer Philip Hyde produces 'a pip of a book'

By J.D.Wolverton, Senior Staff Writer

■ BOOK: Drylands: The Deserts of North America. Photographs and text by Philip Hyde. Introduction and notes by David Rains Wallace. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich; $75.00; 176 pp.

Philip Hyde is one of the finest photographers of the American landscape working today. Drylands, his latest work, represents the culmination of a twenty year-period during which he has been working in the North American deserts. It is one of the most stunning books of photography produced in recent years, a perfect conjunction of subject and artistic sensibility.

Of his approach to photography, Hyde has said that "I am interested primarily in what Emerson called 'the integrity of natural objects.' Natural places, too, have integrity. They express wholeness and individuality, and it is this sense of place that is the foundation of my work. My life in photography has been taken up in exploring natural places for their beauty and uniqueness. It has been a labor of love, and nature has provided me the perfect object."

'Letters to Felice' reveal Kafka's tormented genius

By Tony Tran, Arts & Entertainment Editor

■ BOOK: Letters to Felice. By Franz Kafka. Schocken Books; $13.95; 593 pp.

Franz Kafka (1883-1924) is arguably the definitive 20th century writer. Noted for his forlorn, despairing yet subtly humorous novels The Castle and The Trial, and his extraordinary short stories including "The Metamorphosis" and "In the Penal Colony," Kafka was profoundly affected in his writing by his relationships, especially with his family and close friends.

In this collection compiling Kafka's love letters from 1912 to 1917 to Felice Bauer, with whom he fell in love at a party in Prague and was later twice engaged to but never married, one obtains a full idea of how Kafka's creative impetus was vitalized or stifled as it interacted with his daily work at his insurance company's office, and his relations with others.

He was constantly torn between the searing need to write — which required solitude and being removed from everyday life — and his lifelong yet futile desire to attain the realm of ordinary, normal life

Winner of the 1980 Nobel Prize for Literature, Lithuanian-born Czeslaw Milosz recited his poems to a sold-out audience at LATC recently.

Czeslaw Milosz gives moving poetry reading

Nobel laureate opens LATC literary series

By Tony Tran, Arts & Entertainment Editor

■ POETRY READING: Czeslaw Milosz. At Los Angeles Theater Center. 514 S. Spring Street, downtown Los Angeles. September 12, 1988. For more information call (213) 627-5599.

Czeslaw Milosz gave a moving and humorous poetry reading performance at LATC recently to a sold-out, standing-room only audience. Born in Lithuania in 1911, poet, essayist and novelist Milosz won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1980.

Composed predominantly in Polish, his poems are impressive for their gently introspective yet ardent insights into the interaction of human beings with nature and each other.

Milosz's appearance is the first in the LATC 1988-89 Fall-Winter Poetry/Literary Series. In introduction, director Alan Mandell welcomed the audience, beaming that "Poetry and literature is alive at LATC," and mentioning that "there is 100% renewal subscription."

The LATC poetry series is a heartening, unique program in Los Angeles. Mandell has succeeded in bringing some top literary figures to LATC this year. Remaining appearances in the LATC Poetry/Literary series are by Robert Mezey and David St. John on October 10, Paul Monette on November 14, Gary Snyder on December 12, and Alice Walker on January 9, 1989.

The sold-out crowd meandered in the lobby before the concert, gobbling up poetry volumes by Milosz on sale. Most popular are copies of the Nobel laureate's latest retrospective entitled Collected Poems (Ecco Press).

Milosz recited poems from his long career, starting off with some that he composed while a student in Paris.

Highlights included a "poem about love that lasts one minute and a half," a "monologue of a dead woman," and the tragic "Song for the End of the World," which recounts the horrors of the Holocaust. A leader of the avant-garde Poetry movement in Poland in the 1930s, Milosz joined the resistance movement against the Nazis during World War II.

One of the simplest yet most memorable poems recited is entitled "My-ness":

"My parents, my husband, my brother, my sister."
I am listening in a cafeteria at breakfast.
The women's voices rustle, fulfill themselves
In a ritual no doubt necessary.
I glance sidelong at their moving lips
And I delight in being here on earth
For one more moment, with them, here on earth,
To celebrate our tiny, tiny myness.

A major portion of Milosz's poetry deals with birds, animals and nature. Other poems are inspired by events of the 20th century. He prefers to compose in Polish, which is "more musical and reflective" and because it expresses the design and rhyme of his poetry, but admitting that translations, however flawed, have greatly helped in getting his message to many readers. Milosz delivered a few of the poems in both English and Polish to give the audience the opportunity to experience the fluid cadence of his Polish verse in translation.

A delightful sense of lyrical humor runs through Milosz's poems, evoking frequent swells of laughter and applause from the audience.

Milosz's beautiful, poignant and gentle poetry was enthusiastically received by the standing-room-only audience. The pure beauty and subtle power of his poems provided a most auspicious opening for the 1988-89 poetry/literary series at LATC.

Rambo III
$53,668,183

■ 8. Rambo III
Sly returns once more as John Rambo, a rebel with a new cause in this latest installment in the Rambo phenomenom. Living in a Buddhist monastery in Thailand where he has gone to find inner peace, Rambo is drawn out of seclusion by the Russkie kidnapping of his long-time pal Col. Trautman (Richard Crenna) during a covert operation in the Afghan war. Of course Rambo goes. Of course he goes without any official help from the U.S. government. And although he doesn't kill anybody for the first 45 minutes, Rambo makes up for it by single-handedly taking on over 1,000 commies, 75 tanks and trucks and three helicopters in the film's finale (he even outruns a bomb down a mineshaft!). And of course, Rambo wins. A twelve-pack before viewing will bring countless cheers for Rocky, I mean Rambo, as he once again makes the world a safe place for decent, commie-hatin' folks. Oh, and if you were hoping/praying that Rambo 5 won't be made, who are you kidding if this, the supposedly weakest of the trio, raked in over $50 million.

He-Man Sly plans revenge on Brigitte and Gastineau.

Bull Durham
$47,070,585

■ 9. Bull Durham
To be remembered as the movie that dared to bring baseball movies back into vogue on the big screen, (as witnessed by recent Eight Men Out and upcoming Charlie Sheen flick Major Leagues and Costner again in Shoeless Joe) Bull Durham is a sleek and sexy look inside a minor league ball club. But there's more at stake here than hitting a clutch home run in the bottom of the ninth to win the pennant. Annie Savoy (Susan Sarandon), who believes a guy will listen to anything if he thinks it's foreplay, picks out a member of the Durham Bulls every Spring to work on the fundamentals of life and love. But Annie has her standards. She never sleeps with a player batting less than .250 unless, of course, he's a great glove man up the middle. Ebby Calvin LaLoosh (Tim Robbins) has a fastball that cracks the radar gun at 98 on the rare occasions that it wanders near the strike zone. Crash Davis (Kevin Costner) has spent most of his 12-year career as a catcher bumming around Triple A. His current assignment is to room with and "mature" LaLoosh. But Annie figures that's her job. A great summer film, complete with Costner's great line about "a small of a woman's back, the hanging curveball, high fibre, good scotch, and long, slow, deep, soft, wet kisses that last for three days."

Cynthia Gibb

Go-getter Gibb portrays Karen Carpenter in TV film

By Kevin J. Messick
Off-Campus Editor

"It was an intense experience," said Cynthia Gibb of her role as the late Karen Carpenter in the upcoming CBS movie about Carpenter's fatal struggle with anorexia.

"I put a lot of pressure on myself to live up to the expectations people had for me as far as portraying Karen properly." And if being cast in the film only five days before it started shooting wasn't intimidating enough for the 24-year old actress, having Richard Carpenter (Karen's brother/performing partner) as the film's executive producer was.

"It was intimidating at first because I had very little time to prepare for it," said Gibb, who was required to portray the singer from age 13 to her death at 33. "There was so much to learn. It wasn't only learning about Karen's life," she said, "it was learning her music and learning about anorexia and bulimia. To have Richard Carpenter there checking everything we were doing made for a lot of pressure."

Although she started in television (for two years on Search for Tomorrow before joining the cast of Fame as the rich bitch Holly Laird), The Karen Carpenter Story marks Gibb's return to television from a promising feature film career. "I haven't done TV since Fame, and I feel very fortunate because it's just as hard to break into the TV realm. TV audiences are very loyal to the people they

Mr. North

A divertingly droll and literate comedy, helmed by first-time director Danny Huston (son of the late writer-director John Huston, who co-wrote the script from a Thornton Wilder novel). Set in Newport, Rhode Island during the '20s, it follows the entry of one Theophilus North (Anthony Andrews) into the resort's reactionary upper-crust society. A painfully earnest young man, Theophilus — well played by Anthony Andrews soon turns the town on its head when he unintentionally persuades some of the more gullible citizenry that he can heal anything which ails them. Huston has filmed on location, which, together with top-notch costume and set design, lends the movie an evocative period flavor. It's exceptionally well-cast, with fine ensemble acting from Robert Mitchum, Lauren Bacall, Angelica Huston and David Warner in supporting character roles. ★★★
(J.D. Wolverton)

Coverup

Despite my sympathy to their goals, I can't really endorse this film, which claims to present new information about the Iran-Contra affair. Most of this stuff has already been in the news. Of course, you might get something out of watching it again. Where this film goes wrong is by mixing fact, opinion, and deliberate distortion indiscriminately in a documentary format. Their claim that the CIA was responsible for the bombing attack on Eden Pastora (a Contra leader) which killed several journalists, is backed by no information; and their assertion that George Bush is planning to put 300,000 people in concentration camps for opposing immediate war on Nicaragua, is the kind of thing that is popular with the crowds that pledge money in the revival-like meetings after the movie, but might be viewed more skeptically by an impartial audience. Unrated.

Big Business $38,792,606

■ 10. Big Business . Bette Midler and Lily Tomlin. It doesn't do anything for me. But the teaming of America's two best-known comediennes with director Jim Abrahams (Airplane, Ruthless People) was at the core of this film's conception, with the screenplay being an afterthought. Simply put, two sets of identical twin girls (both named Rose and Sadie) are mistakenly delivered to the wrong parents at birth. That's right, you guessed it, one pair to a wealthy New York couple and the other pair to a small town furniture store owners. Years later, the city twins run a company that owns and decides to dump the store run by the country twins. The country twins go to New York to confront the city twins, and therein lies the film. For Midler/Tomlin fans I'm sure this is a wonderful chance to see them both in action, otherwise there's nothing big here.

Two times two equals zero for Midler, Tomlin.

■ 11. The Great Outdoors
From the men who brought you Pretty in Pink comes yet another family vacation-gone-wrong adventure, but this time it's at a lakeside resort. What a twist! Basically, Roman Craig (Dan Ackroyd) — slimy, obnoxious and complete with a speed boat named "Suck My Wake" — is pitted against his brother-in-law Chet Ripley (John Candy), a mild-mannered family man who prefers lazy days and afternoon BBQ's. Got it? Written and produced by John Hughes, The Great Outdoors will soon reside with so many others of Hughes' comedic attempts on the dusty shelves of home-video stores. Lying somewhere between mediocre and mundane, this latest entry by The Great White Dope just seems to be missing something. Maybe if his longtime favorite Molly Ringwald was fattened up to play John Candy's role, Hughes might have risen above the art-form.

With a screen measuring 16 characters by 8 lines, the fx-7000G can display enough information for some of your biggest ideas. And you can store graphs and formulas, then bring them back for an instant replay.

With its 422 step memory and 193 functions—including linear regression, standard deviation and computer math—the fx-7000G lets you perform computer functions, without acquiring computer knowledge or incurring computer costs.

For additional capabilities, there's the fx-7500G ($109.95). It has a larger memory capacity, with 195 functions, 4,006 memory steps, instant graph enlargement or reduction feature, plus a convenient horizontal folding format.

If you need even more power, our fx-8000G ($119.95) techs you even higher, with 1,446 memory steps and 225 functions. And when hooked up with our optional FA-80 interface, it works with most parallel dot matrix printers or plotters including Casio's own models.

If you have any doubts as to who's the leader in high-tech calculators, just pick up an fx-7000G, fx-7500G or fx-8000G and draw your own conclusions.

Chapman's stirring debut

By David Mori, Staff Writer

■ ALBUM: Tracy Chapman. Elektra.

Def Leppard, Tracy Chapman, Guns n' Roses. Who seems out of place in the list of some of this summer's hottest acts?

The answer is Tracy Chapman, whose self-titled record rocketed up the album chart and eventually reached Number One, a position lately occupied by Heavy Metal records, such as Def Leppard's Hysteria and Guns n' Roses' self-titled debut album.

Chapman's album, however, deserves much more credit than those of her popular Metal foes. Her album is unique, combining folk and

The Phantom of the Opera. Soundtrack to the musical. Polydor.

With his latest work, composer Andrew Lloyd Webber (Jesus Christ Superstar, Evita, Cats) has fashioned another blockbuster musical. There is no denying the gorgeous, lavish glint of this score, which sparkles with a glorious (although tragic) splendor rarely achieved in musical theater.

You could hardly go wrong when using Victor Hugo's greatest masterpiece as basis for anything. Happily, the creators of the hit musical Les Miserables did not.

Les Miz is one of the big success stories in the world of theater in the 1980s, having received massive critical and popular acclaim. And deservedly so. In terms of lyrics and music, I have not been so impressed by a musical soundtrack since I first heard Weill/Brecht's

A Fish Called Wanda
$37,794,123

■ 12. A Fish Called Wanda

If you haven't seen this film already, what are you waiting for. Charles Crichton's off-beat comedy has received critical and public approval across the nation. Highlighted by pleasantly surprising performances from two unheralded American screen comics teamed with two top-notch English funny men, Wanda proved to be one more in this summer's string of comedy hits. Monty Python veterans John Cleese and Michael Palin, together with Jamie Lee Curtis and Kevin Kline, broadened the commercial appeal of previous Python pics with this tale of murder, intrigue, sex and seafood. Representing Cleese's first solo-screenwriting credit, Wanda is just as fresh, crazy and hilarious as everybody says it is.

'Wanda's stars Curtis, Palin, Cleese and Kline.

The Dead Pool
$37,144,871

■ 13. The Dead Pool

Harry Callahan (Clint Eastwood) came back for the fifth time this summer, brandishing his famous Smith and Wesson .44 Magnum, trying once again to clean up the streets of San Francisco. While investigating three seemingly coincidental murders, Callahan is led to an eccentric low-budget film director whose latest game is creating a list of people who probably wouldn't live to see the end of the year. When the people on the list are methodically murdered, Harry tracks a schizophrenic killer with much personal interest, as his name is next on the list. At the very least, The Dead Pool takes some well-deserved swipes at overly-aggressive television reporters, but is definitely not the best of Dirty Harry's adventures. For a better time watching Eastwood chasing crazies, try renting the 1971 original pic Dirty Harry with some of Callahan's better, albeit few, lines of dialogue.

The Symbionese Liberation Army in 'Patty Hearst.'

'Patty Hearst' transcends heiress' guilt or innocence

By I. Nordstrom
Staff Writer

When Patty Hearst was kidnapped in 1974, the event dominated the news for the next three years. The public was transfixed by a militant revolutionary group's abduction of a millionaire's daughter and the 19 year-old heiress' decision to join her captors in a crime spree. Twelve years after Hearst's conviction for armed robbery and use of a firearm in a felony, the controversy over her innocence or guilt remains; a movie of the saga was inevitable.

The new film entitled Patty Hearst skillfully integrates innovative directing and extraordinary acting with its obvious goal of acquitting Hearst. The result is compelling.

Director Paul Schrader effectively expands the bounds of subjective narrative in Patty Hearst; weaving his story through the protaganist's viewpoint, Schrader maintains a constant and arresting tension that is vital to conveying Hearst's fear and sense of vulnerability.

The pivotal title role is filled by Natasha Richardson, who seems to have metamorphosed into Patty Hearst: a very young, somewhat insulated college kid. Richardson's talent steers the film into even darker, deeper waters than the eye of Schrader's venturesome camera can contemplate. But Richardson does not dominate Schrader's carefully choreographed scenes; she works within them, and so mesmerizes the camera that it must follow her.

Schrader's staging is a journey in three acts: three distinct styles which convey Patty's ordeal through color, imagery, and tone. Intercut with Patty's waking nightmares — surreal visions where she sees herself blindfolded — the first part of the film shows the unpredictable barbarity of Patty's captors, the Symbionese Liberation Army, and the beginnings of their hostage's breakdown. A documentary-like realism characterizes the next segment, where the SLA, with Patty in tow, engage in their "urban guerilla" terrorism. After Patty's capture by the FBI, a bleak colorlessness conveys the mood of her trial.

Schrader keeps a tight rein on this stylization throughout almost all of the movie, only faltering in a few scenes. When hundreds of apertures flood the SLA's indoctrination room with light, the director is overcome by his artifice. In contrast, the scenes where a lone beam lights Patty's face show Schrader's skill in understatement; they also give Richardson more room to stretch.

As a study of a terrorist organization, Patty Hearst is an intriguing look at troubled '60s white kids gripped by guilt over their middle-class upbringings, driven by the desire to change the world, and completely inequipped to articulate their goals, let alone form an Utopian society.

The SLA members are monomaniacal not in their revolutionary ideals, but in their desire to be led. This simple fact does more to explain Patty's transformation than the few stilted lines (in an otherwise excellent script by Nicholas Kazan) that try to forward her case for innocence.

The film takes the audience on an exhausting journey through Patty's physical abuse, her severe stress, and her ultimate suppression of self; confused and frightened, she hides within her SLA persona, "Tania," for survival. Patty has chances to escape her tormenters, but, like other victims of abuse, is dependent on those same abusers. This claustrophobic sense of being trapped pervades the movie, and grips the viewer in a constant tension.

Often terrifying, Patty Hearst offers insight into Patty's ordeal, though whether it will absolve her in the public's mind remains to be seen. However, Schrader and Richardson have crafted Patty Hearst into a film that transcends the question of guilt or innocence. It is most valuable as an autonomous vision — separate from Patty Hearst's plight — of a human being's reactions to severe trauma.

The fact that Walt Disney's 1942 animated masterpiece shows up on a list of summer hits in 1988 is a testament to its status as a classic. Of all the animated features in the Disney library, Bambi stands apart for its bold experimentation and artistic achievements in capturing a group of life-like animated animals. Red Heat $34,818,900

■ 15. Red Heat
Director Walter Hill (The Warriors, 48 HRS.) really wanted to work with Arnold Schwarzenegger. Who wouldn't. Arnold is as bankable to the action/adventure genre as Eddie Murphy is to comedy. So Hill has this idea to make Arnold a Russian cop sent on assignment to America. A unique approach? I think not. But even though the cop-out-of-his-element story line is extremely worn out, Hill succeeds in making it all work as Cpt. Ivan Danko (Schwarzenegger) is paired with Chicago cop Art Ridzik (Jim Belushi) in Carolco's action/detective and sometimes funny flick. In the era of glasnost, Red Heat boasts that it's the first film to shoot in Moscow's famed Red Square and, in a departure from evil Ivan Drago-like super-human Russian beasts, Schwarzenegger plays a Russian hero, sent to the Windy City to extradite a Russian drug dealer. Belushi is less than thrilled when assigned to assist Danko, and the rocky relationship between the two is the core of Red Heat, driving both the drama and the humor.

Raising money was not the impetus for the tour, as costs will be met in part by ticket and concert merchandise sales. Funds for the current global itinerary were underwritten by Reebok International Ltd.

In exchange for pledging to cover up to $10 million in deficits and setting up an annual Human Rights Award, Reebok got to put its name on the cover of the tour program and on every souvenir T-shirt sold in the stadiums. But the real presenter remained Amnesty, whose message was delivered by the performers.

Bruce Springsteen, who began playing a high-energy 90-minute set at midnight, closing the six-hour show, explained his view of the relationship between rock 'n' roll and Amnesty's ideals in his remarks between songs. Remembering how he felt as a teenager buying rock singles, he said that the music always represented "a sense of fun, a sense of good times, a sense of sex, a sense of your own possibilities . . . but most of all, a sense of freedom."

Joining Springsteen was a musical assembly well-suited to carry Amnesty's message of hope. Sting, Peter Gabriel, Joan Baez, hot newcomer Tracy Chapman and Youssou N'Dour of Senegal comprised a group of performers unmatched in passion, critical acclaim and commercial success.

Concert organizer Jack Healy, executive director of Amnesty International in the United States, originally intended to have various artists show up for different legs of the tour (a la Live Aid, US Festival). But in an event of this magnitude, Healy realized the need for big commercial names for financial and strategic reasons. Cutting the cost of shuffling groups in and out concerts across the globe and insuring the best chance of filling stadiums on five continents were the deciding factors for having only five musicians.

U2, the band that had been the backbone of Amnesty's earlier "Conspiracy of Hope" concerts, was the obvious first choice to headline the "Human Rights Now" tour. But the Irish quartet was working in Los Angeles on its upcoming film Rattle and Hum and couldn't commit.

However, confirming widespread speculation before last Wednesday's concert, U2's lead singer Bono Hewson appeared on stage at 1:45 a.m. to help close the concert. Instantly recognized in the Coliseum by every bleary-eyed audience member, Bono joined the star-studded ensemble for "Chimes of Freedom" and "Get Up, Stand Up."

The tour began six weeks ago in London's Wembley Stadium and will play for more than one million people in Europe, North America, South America, Africa and Asia.

Another billion people will be able to tune in a TV concert/documentary of the event — a three-hour special combining concert and behind-the-scenes

'Vietnam'

— it is most exceptional and important for its emotional power. Reality is that the tragedy of thousands of faceless dead pales by the horror of a single, identified, named death. Dear America names the dead that the country has failed to recognize for so long. It puts faces on our heroes, and as we cry for the one man who wrote the letter, we mourn for the many who still go unrecognized.

Now that Vietnam has been appropriated by Movieland for films and television, we often witness extravagant extensions of the myths that have developed around the Vietnam era. Dear America stands apart from the rest. The other pat exercizes don't resolve the "Vietnam issue"; they splinter it into fragments, diffusing the light, shifting the glare. With their easy answers, romantic subplots or numbing soundtracks, they trivialize the subjects of even their best intentions.

Soundtrack abuse — intermittent emotion-stirring music — is so rampant of late that, unfortunately, even this fine documentary with its somber subject must indulge in the trend. Dear America uses music to its advantage at times: for irony, for political commentary, or to convey a mood. However, music also detracts from the power of the important subject. Numbing at best, and manipulative — happy song, happy audience — all too often, music is anesthesia against active viewing. Dear America's music, from Sam Cooke to CCR to Jimi Hendrix, is excellent in itself and appropriate for the time, but it insulates the audience from the reality of the documentary footage. Body bags speak for themselves.

The more serious failing of Dear America is indicative not of a simple trend, but of a chronic problem in American film: racial bias and the lack of acknowledgment of contributions by minorities. The documentary's focus is on whites in a war fought overwhelmingly by minorities. Blacks are represented in the film (though not equally with whites), while nary a Latino, American Indian, or Asian is shown throughout. That minority men — who fought and died in greater numbers than white Americans — remain invisible in Dear America compounds the tragedy of Vietnam. Veterans of that war have been ignored too long already. This, one more tragic omission of part of their ranks, will not help to heal the wounds of that troubled time.

One of my uncles, a Vietnam veteran, told me that Dear America was the best film of the Vietnam War he has seen: it was real, even "too real." It was real and moving to me, who have not even the faintest, blurry memories of that time. Dear America will not be everyone's Vietnam. One film can't be. But it is a valuable, if flawed, step towards Americans claiming the Vietnam War as their history, and its veterans as their heroes.

■ 16. A Nightmare On Elm Street 4: The Dream Master
The fourth installment in what has become New Line Cinema's bread-and-butter at the box office, A Nightmare On Elm Street 4: The Dream Master boasts the highest budget yet — all of which went to its high-caliber special effects. Here's a sample of what to expect: As Freddy Krueger (Robert Englund) is about to slice a young girl, light hits Freddy from a piece of glass, like a blast. Freddy sees his reflection, at which point he screams as the trapped souls of dead children begin tearing through Freddy's body. Freddy's sweater stretches and rips apart, as all the tiny bodies trapped inside try to escape. Finally, Freddy's head explodes. But, is Freddy dead? Well, if the Friday the 13th series is any measure, I think you can make an educated guess. Look forward to the gruesome new television series this fall, Freddy's Nightmares.

Midnight Run

■ 17. Midnight Run
Producer-director Martin Brest (Beverly Hills Cop) enables Robert De Niro to win over audiences as a genuinely funny man; finally showcases the comedic talents of Charles Grodin in a good film; and delivers a wonderful action-comedy. More than just a buddy film and more than just a road picture, Midnight Run (bounty hunter slang for an easy job) deftly combines a non-stop action chase spanning 3,000 miles with the humor and pathos of two men on the run. Jack Walsh (De Niro), a frustrated ex-Chicago-cop-turned-bounty hunter is supposed to bring in Jonathan "The Duke" Mardukas, a conscientious accountant who embezzled $15 million from the Mob, gave the money to charity, was subsequently arrested, and jumped bail. With $100,000-fee on his head, Walsh will put up with anything (and does) to collect his money. Though not very high on the list of box-office winners due to its later release date, Midnight Run stands out as one of this summer's true all-around hits.

The concert was designed to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, a statement of social and political freedom adopted by the United Nations.

The Declaration was also the inspiration and subject of a well-received animated film produced for the tour by a team of 41 internationally recognized animators from 13 countries, and screened before Springsteen's set.

Those present last Wednesday night received a personal Passport to Human Rights, a pocket-size replica of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights.

The arts come alive at UCLA

Center of Performing Arts director in interview

By Tony Tran, Arts & Entertainment Editor

Rendering an artistic, more human face on the frequently faceless UCLA institution is Pebbles Wadsworth's conviction. The executive director at UCLA's Center for the Performing Arts — which brings the world's greatest performers in the live arts to campus, predominantly at Royce Hall — Wadsworth is committed to making the Center the cultural heart of UCLA.

Education and diversity

According to Wadsworth, the mission of the Center of the Performing Arts is four-fold.

One goal is to augment students' education at UCLA with the live arts. "It's not a program that is only geared towards the college of fine arts students," said Wadsworth, "but toward the whole, general student population, so that while they are at the university they can experience the best of the arts at a price that they can afford."

The second objective of the Center is to offer a platform for new artists, giving them a hall where they can perform and get reviewed. The Center constantly works to support new art forms and to build audiences for those arts.

As Wadsworth explained, modern dance originated at UCLA, which had the first modern dance program of any university in the country. "Martha Graham appeared here," she said. "It took the university about nine years to build an audience, to educate people about it. Out of their success now, modern dance is now performed all over the city of Los Angeles. Bella Lewitzky resides in this area."

The Center for the Performing Arts is always adapting to the cultural needs of the campus and city. "So it's ever-changing, what art form we're supporting and building art forms for," continued Wadsworth.

Furthermore, the Center seeks to reflect the ever-changing ethnic

Elinore O'Connell as Fantine

Faces from hit musical 'Les Miserables'

Cast members O'Connell, Runolfsson hail from UCLA

By Michelle R. Drew, Contributor

L.A.'s hottest ticket right now is the musical Les Miserables. If you haven't seen it you should. If you have, you probably want to see it again. Here's a chance to meet a few of the actors involved with Les Miserables. They are Elinore O'Connell in the role of Fantine; Anne Marie Runolfsson, a member of the ensemble; and Gary Barker, understudy for Jean Valjean and a member of the ensemble. Not coincidentally two of the three (O'Connell and Runolfsson) are UCLA students, past and present.

Elinore O'Connell: The passion and the glory

"If they don't have an absolute burning passionate desire — and the key word is 'passionate desire' — to do theatre, they won't last two years out of school," Elinore O'Connell (Fantine in Les Miserables) warned prospective actors and artisans.

With burning passion as her philosophy for success in theatre, it is easy to see how she was attracted to Les Miserables. For O'Connell, "It (Les Miserables) speaks about things I want to speak about: human dignity, the struggle and the human condition. It's very uplifting, it's very spiritually uplifting."

And it is passion which o'Connell believes draws people to see the hit musical. "Les Miserables is hitting L.A. by storm because it reaches people in their true level, which is their passion," O'Connell explained the musical's enormous appeal. "It's hitting them . . . It's like human struggle . . . So they're relating to it and being blown away by it. L.A.'s just never seen theatre like this before."

A native of the Southern Californian area O'Connell received her MFA from UCLA. "I was there for two years, two important years.'

Speaking about her experiences at UCLA O'Connell remarked, "I never stopped working on the main stage .....or two solid years." She hoped students realize that UCLA "is probably the easiest place that they have to express their art, because there's no paycheck attached to it and they're not going to be fired. The one thing I would say is to take more risks, a lot more risks, and not play it safe while in school. This is the safest environment that they could possibly do this in."

Speaking with Elinore O'Connell about Les Miserables, one gets the impression of being in the presence of an ethereal being, a romantic perhaps. But don't let her soft-spoken demeanor fool you. Once out on stage there's not a dry eye in the house as she sings

Innovative composer Phillip Glass comes to UCLA

By Marlene Casillas
Contributor

A refreshing recipe for the theater is one that combines the talents of playwright David Henry Hwang with designer Jerome Sirlin and adds the touch of Phillip Glass.

Coming this fall to UCLA, the Phillip Glass Ensemble introduces new flavor to the stage with 1,000 Airplanes on the Roof, an innovative combination of acting, live music and a subtly changing, visual set design. After opening in Vienna during July and touring through Australia and Europe, the West Coast Premiere of Airplanes will take place at the Wadsworth theater from Oct. 31 to Nov. 5. Tickets can be obtained through the UCLA Center for the Performing Arts.

A world-renowned composer, Phillip Glass has combined talents with some of the best directors, writers and designers to create unique musical performances in both theater and film.

Among others, he has worked with filmmaker Paul Schrader, known for his work on Taxi Driver and The Last Temptation of Christ, and Richard Foreman, the 1986-87 Obie award-winner for Best New American Play.

Last year, two documentary films attracted wide-spread attention. Powaaqatsi and Koyaanisqatsi, Glass's projects with director Reggio Godfrey, were critically acclaimed films in which the music was performed live. In a recent interview, Glass described the films, which illustrate western civilization and third-world farming cultures, as "visual poems."

Although his film and concert work has brought him to the forefront of the innovative musical world, Glass works primarily in theater. "Musicians that work mostly in theater tend to be a special breed of composers," Glass laughed.

While concert composers tend to work in abstract music, theater composers tend to work in subject matter. Thus, he creates his pieces based on specific ideas. In the past few years, Glass has taken inert forms of art, like film, and brought them back to life by adding live music and acting.

In films, the image is set and never changes. In Airplanes, however, the piece is continual and is re-created every performance.

The piece began from Glass's idea to do a story about one man's encounter with visitors from another planet.

"Once I decided the kind of treatment it needed, I picked the people to suit the project," he said.

Glass chose Obie award-winning playwright Hwang because he wanted a writer with excellent stage skills. He chose Sirlin because he knew he was guaranteed a unique design. Although he maintained his role as director, the conceptualizing of the piece was a collaborative effort.

"This is the first time I've brought a theater piece to L.A.," Glass explained, "because they are technically complicated and usually involve too many people to travel."

In Airplanes, a sole performer interacts with a stage design which is projected onto a three-dimensional screen. Although it looks like film, it is actually photography presented with 12 coordinated slide projectors. According to Glass, the images fade into each other and form montages the way film does. Thus, the stage design changes to suit the character's monologue.

"The 90-minute show is an amazing tour-de-force for one performer," said Glass. The artist must experience the story and provide the voices of other people. The demands of a monologue in a 35-city North American tour prompted the Glass Ensemble to creatively double-cast the show.

Airplanes alternates an actress and an actor in the part. Although the script remains the same, each performer plays it differently which changes the sense and impact of the piece.

"Airplanes is an unusual

Emilio, Kiefer, Lou and Charlie join faces in this latest dramatization of the escapades of William H. Bonney, the wild young gunman who became Billy the Kid. Joining the film's four facemen are newcomers Dermot Mulroney and Casey Siemasko, rounding out the pack of six outcasts who declare war on the Old West's equivalent to the Mob and become the object of the biggest manhunt in the history of the West. But a Western with a rock music score? Come on. The only good thing about Young Guns was the trailer, as the movie serves only as one big star vehicle that sputters and lurches toward a ho-hum ending. Kiefer Sutherland is perhaps the only actor who emerges unscathed by the film, and though I hate to say it, Emilio did O.K. as the Kid. Sure to be a hit with Galleria groupies, Young Guns will assure itself a place on video rental charts after its theatrical run.

Director Schrader tackles story of Patty Hearst

Paul Schrader is a UCLA film grad.

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

Paul Schrader has worked on many great films. Taxi Driver, Raging Bull, Mishima, and The Last Temptation of Christ, are about profoundly disturbing topics, and he approaches them in very non-standard, non-formulaic ways. Schrader's latest directorial effort, Patty Hearst (the story of the kidnapped newspaper heiress who later joined her SLA captors in a string of holdups and robberies) is no exception.

Schrader talked about Patty Hearst during a recent interview at the Chateau Marmont, the famous hotel on Sunset where John Belushi died and a lot of other famous names, like Christopher Reeves, or Wim Wenders, stay when they pass through L.A. In a quiet but crisp clear voice, he projects the image of a thoughtful man who struggles with his work and wants the world to accept it, but on his terms. As he sipped on a diet Coke and smoked a couple of cigarettes, the former UCLA film student also shared his feelings about filmmaking in general.

Bruin: You attended UCLA . . .

Schrader: I went to grad school in the film department, and got an M.A. That's when Collin Young was running the film department.

Bruin: Do you think it helped you much?

Schrader: I always tell people, if you want to get in the film industry, the best places to go are UCLA and USC, because you have the luxury of being around the industry without being part of it. It's very hard to step off the plane in L.A. and say "I want to be a filmmaker." It's a very debilitating, potentially disruptive experience. They'll eat you up. If you're a film student . . .

Bruin: At least you're doing something.

Schrader: Right. You're doing something. For two years or whatever, you can be a student. I was also a free-lance writer for the L.A. Free Press, which at that time was a big, hundred page or so, alternative newspaper. And then, you've got a couple of years buffer on the inevitable disappointments that are entailed in working in this profession. When I look back at the time I was at UCLA, in critical studies, I wasn't trying to be a filmmaker, I was just trying to be a critic. Then I reached a point in my life where non-fiction was insufficient, and I moved into fiction. This is how I sort of remember it. But in fact, about a year ago I was having a conversation with Don Pennebaker, and I reminded him that I had interviewed him once when I was a student. And he said, "I remember that interview, because after it was over I went back into my room, and I said to my wife "there's a kid who won't be a critic long". And of course I didn't think of it that way, but I guess I was already hustling.

Bruin: How do you feel about critics now that you're a filmmaker?

Schrader: I think very highly of criticism. I came through that route. It's actually much harder to be a good critic than a good filmmaker. In some ways the financial constraints against good criticism are very strong, because nobody wants to read it. Fewer people want to read good criticism than want to see good films. I still think very highly of critics, even though they certainly have not shown me any favoritism.

Bruin: How did you eventually make the transition from UCLA into the "real world."

Schrader: I wrote a book right out of UCLA on theological aesthetics, and was free-lancing and editing "Film" magazine. I gradually made my way up the ladder as a critic, and I ran into a period of personal trouble, which I just couldn't get a handle on. It was starting to eat up my life. The need to fantasize; the need to create stories became overwhelming; and that became Taxi Driver. That movie just sort of jumped out of my head, like an animal. It was that kid, that crazy Travis Bickle who just couldn't stand it any more and had these wild fantasies. So I come into filmmaking for the best of reasons: I had no choice. I had to tell stories.

Bruin: Was there a lot of you in Travis Bickle?

Schrader: Yeah. He's sort of this fundamentalist Christian who has wandered in from the snowy fields of the Mid-West and doesn't know what to do about it, can't resolve his attraction.

I look around at my generation, which is the late '60s film school generation, and I'm a little disappointed about what has become of a number of my peers. You know, how the causes and all that were shucked off and the sense of purpose has been lost. But then I look at the generation which has followed us, and see something even less interesting.

Bruin: But a lot of people are very concerned about getting jobs.

Schrader: I remember sitting in Melnitz hall and booing people out of the auditorium, because they were talking about commercial considerations. We were a very pricky and pure crowd.

I got into film criticism as a by-product of the anti-war movement. There was a message: you had to go out and tell people about these films. There was a fervor. You could go out and change things. That's what being young is about. Part of what a college education is, is altruism. You 'Phantom,' 'M. Butterfly' head Broadway wave to L.A.

David Lithgow, B.D. Wong in 'M. Butterfly.'

Alex Chun
Contributor

Watch out, Los Angeles. The Broadway wave has begun crashing against your shores.

Having started this past summer with the highly anticipated production of Les Miserables as well as a brief but mediocre revival of Cats, the floodgates have opened for a plethora of Tony Award-winners to hit our coast: Fences at the Doolittle; Anything Goes at the Civic Light Opera; Les Liasons Dangereuses, A Walk in the Woods, and The Phantom of the Opera at the Ahmanson. With the Broadway flow moving westward, New York's newest sensation M. Butterfly hopefully won't be too far behind.

The Broadway invasion will be a welcome relief from the relatively drought-ridden theater summer. But unlike Broadway, the majority of the plays will all be playing consecutively rather than concurrently. Les Liasons Dangereuses, A Walk in the Woods and Phantom, for example, will all be playing as part of a subscription series. Phantom, however, was left at the end of the series to entertain the possibility of an indefinite run.

Michael Crawford as the Phantom.

While these plays are in a sense coming from Broadway, they are also in a sense not coming from Broadway. Rather, the plays originated on Broadway with the L.A. productions being nothing more than national touring companies. Because productions are still continuing on Broadway, many of the plays will be devoid of any original cast members. This often necessary evil is usually not detrimental, as can be seen in Les Miz and Cats, but in some cases it may alter the overall complexity of the play.

The two most anticipated plays of the oncoming Broadway onslaught, and coincidentally the two most affected by their stars, are Fences and Phantom. While the question of the lead has been answered with authority in the former, it has yet to be definitely settled in the latter.

The first of the migrants to hit the West-coast stage is Fences starring James Earl Jones, its original Broadway lead. Better known as the asthmatic voice behind Darth Vader's mask, Earl Jones will be replaced on Broadway by Billy Dee Williams.

A heavy heavy drama, Fences is the fictional biography of Eael Jones as Troy Maxon, a spiteful man whose prime years were squandered in the confines of the old Negro baseball leagues.

Maxon dwells on that which he has been deprived of, while not appreciating what he has. Increasing the pressure upon his deteriorating macho ego is an entire world of opportunity now available to his son — opening a chasm of resentment and jealousy between the two.

Fences is not the play to attend if you're planning to leave with a smile on your face. Instead, the introspective play gives its audience the chance to look into the frail psyche of a bitter man facing his mid-life crisis.

The Phantom of the Opera, on the other hand, is a romantically tragic rock opera. A winner of seven Tonys at this year's awards, including Best Musical (a surprise to many), Andrew Lloyd Webber has again captivated audiences with just what they've been longing for: lavish costumes, dazzling scenery — which includes an underground river, a stage-consuming cascading staircase, and a three-quarters-of-a-ton chandelier that hangs perilously over the audience) — and his usual vast array of catchy pop tunes.

But what truly makes Phantom, and what will hopefully make Phantom in L.A., is Michael Crawford as the theater's disfigured unofficial caretaker. His delicately touching performance is something that L.A. audiences should not be denied (there has been encouraging speculation that Crawford will indeed be performing in L.A.). His Tony for Best Actor was indeed nothing short of a given.

But even lacking Crawford's phenomenal presence, Phantom, as all of Webber's past

O'CONNELL: Passion

the powerful show-stopper "I Dreamed A Dream."

O'Connell has always known she wanted to be an actress. "I think that it's kind of a romantic notion, but I've never done anything else. I've never desired to do anything else."

When speaking about her first encounter with the music, O'Connell adopts a reverent tone. "Some things just grab you and this is something that just grabbed me from the very first time I heard this music."

Her first exposure to the musical was the French version of the song "I Dreamed A Dream." "It just blew me away," said O'Connell. "I stopped what I was doing and I sat down and I said, 'My God, this song!' "

From the moment she heard the music O'Connell began to prepare for the challenges of the production. "I prepared myself physically and I also prepared myself vocally." Unable to capture the sound from just the recording she flew to New York. As she sat watching the Broadway production, O'Connell recalled "I sat there and I said what is this sound, what is it they're doing?"

"It's a very fighting, passionate sound," said O'Connell. "It's a harsh sound sometimes. It's not the prettiest of vocal choices, but it's probably the most gut-wrenching, truthful vocal choice."

Currently, performing her role eight times a week in Los Angeles isn't exactly easy. "It's very difficult to, every day of your life, to be that focused and that present," said O'Connell. "Because every night I stand up in front of 1850 people and they all have expectations and they're excited to see Les Miserables."

"Every night it's a different thing that gets inside of me that makes it (the role of Fantine) come alive. It's her story, her struggle and her triumph."

Anne Marie Runolfsson: A Cherished Memory

"I heard the music, the London album actually, when it first happened," recalled Anne Marie Runolfsson. "I just remember thinking it was such an amazing piece of theatre. I'd read the novel and I just couldn't even believe that someone had taken this novel and made it into a musical. It was an overwhelming idea. Finally I got a chance to see it (in New York) and I was absolutely blown away."

Anne Marie Runolfsson, a UCLA World Arts and Culture major, is a member of the Les Miserables ensemble. However, don't be fooled into thinking that there's not much to ensemble work.

"I counted this up once: I think I play somewhere in the neighborhood of 16 characters in the course of an evening," said Runolfsson about her current role(s) in the L.A. production of Les Miserables. "I go from a beggar to an unemployed person to an employed person to a whore to a diner to a revolutionary waitress to someone who's lost someone in the war to a guest at the wedding to a ghost."

One of her more prominent parts takes place in the scene at the Thernardiers' inn. "Steven Brinehard and I, we play a couple of diners who come into the inn," said Runolfsson. "We're the only real low-key sort of people that are in the establishment. You know, these people are trying to have a nice quiet meal, while everyone else is going crazy around them." The precision of the actions hints at the immense work put in during the months of rehearsal.

Runolfsson describes rehearsal as a time when the actors were "given very large parameters to work within, in terms of developing our own characters. Anything that we create is totally up to us." The main demand Runolfsson feels is the realization that the ensemble work "is all about costume changes or makeup changes and getting out there and telling the story."

"The most difficult thing is really the energy level, you know, maintaining a consistent energy level when you're doing the ensemble," said Runolfsson. "You literally start at 8:00 and you're finished at 11:20." For Runolfsson it's not playing all the parts that is most challenging, "but just being able to maintain your physical energy throughout the entire show. You're giving 100 percent at the end of the show as well as the beginning. The other part is doing that eight times a week, and especially on a five-show weekend."

Cast members of 'Les Miz' in rehearsal.

Shedding light on the musical's appeal, Runolfsson explained: "I honestly believe that it is mainly and primarily because of the message that the show is communicating, which is the theme of revolution, of fighting for what you believe in. I think that it's something that applies to today. They are saying if there's something worth fighting for, it's worth giving up everything pursuing it and that's how change is going to effect itself in the course of history."

Runolfsson is also pursuing a college degree at UCLA. "I'm kind of enrolled off and on for probably the rest of my life," she said. Runolfsson enrolled as a Freshman in 1983. After that year she got some work and was working somewhat steadily for about three years. Last fall she returned and changed her major can make the world a better place, change things, make the world a better place.

I think today it's regrettably gotten much worse. Students will ask you about getting an agent before they even start writing. If you're writing something good, the agent thing will take care of itself.

Bruin: The film you have coming out now is Patty Hearst. What got you interested in her story?

Schrader: To be honest, I was at the point where I had just had a film come out, Light of Day, that wasn't very successful, and I was very anxious to get back to work. And this was available.

But then I got involved in the case and saw some interesting things I could do. I always like the idea of taking someone's point of view, someone socially marginal. Taxi Driver, Raging Bull, Mishima, they take the point of view, without winking or nudging the audience, and just follow the person, see the world as they do.

Bruin: In the preparation for this film, you actually met Patty Hearst. What was your impression of her and her attitude toward the SLA?

Schrader: I think she regarded them as terrifying buffoons. The deaths of a certain segment of them in later years changed things a bit.

I think that for a good segment of the audience, this is going to be new history. The film presumes that you know something about the case. You never cut to the police. You never cut to the family. I suspect it will be baffling to some, but it all actually happened.

Bruin: The film takes a neutral tone: here's the facts, you can make your own decision. But what is your personal opinion about the case?

Schrader: She's an empty vessel, a passive protagonist. Movies are about people who do things. Patty Hearst didn't do anything, so it violates the central commercial tenet of films. In a way, you have to make the film around her. It's an interesting case. Someone is snatched away from her environment at the age of 19, and turned into a public symbol for all kinds of groups, whether it was the left, the right, the media. If she had died they would have all claimed her for their own. The Reagan governorship would have made it a cause for more draconian measures against political dissent, the left would have had their Tanya martyr, the Media would have had a hero. But she actually didn't die. What I like is, at the end of the movie, she finally gets to say her piece, which is, I'm really not basically that interesting, I'm sorry I lived, I'm kind of inconvenient, and fuck you for doing this to me.

Bruin: At the time this all of this happened, there was a big backlash. Parents would send their kids off to college, and they would become revolutionaries or radicals.

Schrader: A lot of parents lost children in this sort of way. Another thing that was interesting about this case is the high degree of class and race prejudice. She was young, white, rich, and somehow she deserved to have this happen to her.

Bruin: She was clearly brainwashed, but wasn't the final question at what point did she cease to be a prisoner, at what point did she become responsible for her actions?

Schrader: That's why she went to jail, because she couldn't answer that question.

Bruin: You adapted the screenplay for The Last Temptation of Christ from Nikos Kazantzakis' book. Where does your personal point of view come in?

Schrader: I think the dominant voice in the film is Kazantzakis'. You have a novel, and the script, which skews the novel in a certain direction, and then the production, which skews it further in another direction. But I think Marty (Scorcese) would agree with me that it's really Kazanzakis' Last Temptation.

Bruin: What's your view on all the protest?

Paul Schrader

Schrader: Basically, it's invigorating. A good movie ought to be worth a good dinner conversation. I've always gotten involved in making people argue and discuss, and to me it's a sign of success, that it really means something to people.

Bruin: Did your parents like it?

Schrader: Well, my mother's dead, but my father . . . He does not think well of films in general.

Bruin: I read that you never saw a film until you were 17.

Schrader: It was a very conservative religious group, and we had a fanatical proscription against what were called "Worldly Amusements," which were like dancing, smoking, and movies. As my mother once told me, it's not the individual movie, it's the industry. The industry is evil.

Bruin: You don't follow that?

Schrader: (Laughs) No.

Gibb

watch."

As for Gibb's attempts on the big screen, she has made five very different films ranging from critical successes to box-office disappointments. Debuting with Rob Lowe in Youngblood, she went on to draw critical attention for her passionate portrayal of Jean Donovan, the Irish-American missionary killed by rebel forces in Oliver Stone's Salvador.

On the low-end, there was Modern Girls and Burt Reynold's Malone. Her most recent effort was replacing the Ally Sheedy character in a newly written role for Tri-Star's Short Circuit II this summer.

"Fame and Short Circuit weren't as tough," Gibb said of the difference in portraying real people's lives in Salvador and as Carpenter. "Fictional characters can be as tough, but in the past when I've played a real character, they've been emotionally draining roles, women with tragic lives."

The way Gibb readily speaks about both her television and feature film careers belies the difficulty many actors face in crossing over between the two mediums. "It is much easier than it used to be," she admits. "When Youngblood came along, I fought to the point of jeopordizing my role on Fame to do the Youngblood role. I knew it was one of the few chances that I got to do that crossover."

One transition Gibb never had the opportunity to make was a college education. "I'm really hungry for an education. I try very hard to stay on top of things."

Speaking with her, you can sense that Gibb is vulnerable to the fact that she didn't spend four years in some ivy-covered institution. But she doesn't regret it. "If I had to live it over again, I'd do exactly what I did."

See COMMITTED, Page 37

Committed

She may not regret what she did, but she still wonders about collegiate life. "It's hard, because I would have had a great time at college. But I'll tell you, I think as far as experience and knowledge goes, there may be a few academic subjects that I would be more knowledgeable about right now. But as far as life experience and retaining what I've learned, I think I'm more educated now than I would have been had I gone to school."

Looking back on a 14 year-old girl commuting from Westport, Connecticut to New York for modeling auditions, dreaming of an acting career, Gibb simply explains that "when I follow my heart it just kind of leads me around." And family support has remained a constant throughout her career, though she admits to still being occasionally asked by family "What are you going to really do for a living."

When Gibb isn't pursuing acting, she is involved with Medical Aid for El Salvador (sparked by her involvement with the film Salvador), as well as supporting a child in Mexico through the Christian Children's Fund. "I get his report card and I get letters from him. It's really rewarding. He's very cute."

Gibb, along with fellow acting peers Mary Stuart Masterson, Judd Nelson and Esai Morales, is also actively involved with The Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy.

Having outside interests is of the highest priority to the young actress. "It (acting) has to take 110 percent of your energy, as far as commitment. But it can't be everything to you, because then you've got nothing to bring to the art. You've got to go out and live life."

from Vocal Performance to World Arts and Culture with a theatre concentration. She changed majors because "I've been working so much outside of school I would prefer to make myself more well-rounded. I hope to go back (to UCLA) next Winter Quarter and to at least make another drive towards getting my degree."

A native of Southern California, Runolfsson grew up in Los Alamitos. She first expressed an interest in acting in her early teens. "When I was 14 or 15 I asked my parents if I could get involved in a community theatre. They were very supportive." While still in junior and senior high Runolfsson worked at Long Beach Civic Light Opera, Long Beach Community Playhouse and other community theatres in the area.

"I honestly believe that this is going to be one of the most important theatrical experiences in my life. I think I will always cherish this memory because of the feeling that it elicits from the audience."

'Les Miz' has extended its run until March.

Gary Barker: Persistence paid off

'It's the theatre piece of the decade," said Les Miserables' Gary Barker, understudy for Jean Valjean and a member of the ensemble. Barker has the varied tasks of either putting all his energy in one character, the lead, or maintaining his energy throughout the number of roles the ensemble members portray.

As Valjean, Barker believes that "his whole story, to me, is summed up in the end where they all sing 'To love another monologue for the theater because the text is set into the music," Glass said. It is not an opera, but it is more musical than a play.

Glass prefers live theater because it is a continually evolving, creative work. The ensemble still changes lines and slides as they develop new inspirations.

"With theater, you're never done," he said.

In addition, he enjoys collaborating with the other artists. Theater, unlike films, allows everyone to do more than their job description.

"If I only contributed the music it would be like working on an assembly line."

Glass composed the music after everything else was ready. Working out the story is more complicated than composing the music because it involves the other participants. For Airplanes the ensemble talked through the story for months before writing the script. Hwang even spent time working with Glass in New York.

Although he does not perform in Airplanes, Glass enjoys playing the piano in addition to writing, and plans to bring a concert to Los Angeles soon.

After 35 years of experience, Glass can create pictures with his music that evoke a particular emotion or atmosphere. He creates the music with ease, despite the complicated technique involved.

"It's like someone who designs shoes for a living," he said, "after a while you just get used to it."

When he is not touring, Glass resides in New York with his family. "At least that's where I leave them and find them when I come back," he said.

Born in Baltimore, he started playing the piano when he was eight years old and began performing at 10. He studied music for 20 years, at the Julliard School of Music and at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore.

By discovering his talent for music at an early age, Glass always knew how he would spend his adult life. The composer only had to wonder whether or not he would make a living at it.

"When I was 41 I began to make a living at it, but I wasn't at all sure until then," he laughed.

When he first started, his projects were not conducive to earning a living. However, he believes society has changed and that he helped make the change. After 20 years of touring he has built an audience.

"When you're involved in this type of occupation, it doesn't matter if you make money or not," he said.

Glass enjoys composing and believes that musicians never wish they chose different careers. "I've never heard a composer say, 'I should have gone into real estate'," he said.

Yet Glass's musical projects are not just jobs. He considers his work more than merely a hobby or passion. "It's who I am," he said.

Harmony Gold returns with animated 'Robotech II'

By Tom Yun
Design Editor

Rick Hunter and Lisa Hayes, along with loyal members of their crew, prepare to defend their spacecraft.

Four years ago, Robotech exploded into the animation scene. A a sci-fi series from Japan, Robotech drew millions of American viewers with its computer-assisted animation and lengthy plot. Then suddenly, it was all gone. A sequel was promised, but little of the new series immediately surfaced. Patient fans feared that the Robotech adventure may have truly been lost.

Harmony Gold, the producers of Robotech, have finally returned with Robotech II: The Sentinels. The fans, expecting another slick series, are in for a little disappointment.

Unlike earlier ad campaigns publicizing a 65-episode series, Robotech II was completed as a 90-minute feature film. Robotech II is not really a sequel to Robotech or the largely unseen Robotech: The Movie. It is actually an attempt to eliminate a giant plot hole in the original series.

Looking back upon the original series, Robotech was created when director Carl Macek rescripted and combined three unrelated Japanese series (Macross, Southern Cross, and Mospeada) which otherwise would have been too short to market. The resulting epic featured our hero Rick Hunter and the crew of the giant spacefortress SDF-1 attempting to defend the Earth through apocalypse.

Unfortunately, Rick Hunter and the crew of the SDF-1 were only featured in Macross, the first of the three series combined into Robotech. Fans caught on when the following two series provided the excuse that the original crew of the SDF-1 "left on Admiral Hunter's ill-fated expedition."

Robotech II finally unites the three series and explains what happened on the "ill-fated expedition."

Imagine it is the year 2020. The heroic expeditionary forces of Admiral Hunter embark on a voyage to Tirol, the home of the diabolic Robotech Masters. This time, Hunter's flagship is the SDF-3, a red, mile-long behemoth fabricated from the salvaged remains of the old SDF-1, SDF-2 and Zentraedi command vessel.

The purpose of the entire mission is to find the secrets of protoculture. Simply speaking, protoculture is edible rocket fuel grown and processed by alien flowering plants (what a resource).

Surprise! The Robotech Masters have already left Tirol to apocalize war-torn Earth a little more. To make matters worse, the Invid Regent comes raving mad because his wife, the Invid Regess, has dumped him to join in on terrorizing Earth. Poor Earth. (I can't go any further without killing the surprise factor.)

For all of the Robotech fans taking notes, many of the original crew are back. Rick, Lisa, Max, Miriya, Breetai and Exedore return to the helm. New in the picture are Aurora Sterling (Max & Miriya's other daughter), Jack Baker (Rick's new little brother) and the twisted Colonel T.R. Edwards.

Fans will note that Robotech II was originally publicized as a 65-episode series, not a feature. According to Harmony Gold's public relations manager Sheila Morris, the crash in the U.S. dollar (vs. Japanese yen) was largely responsible for the change in production. The costs of animating the 65 half-hour episodes (by Tatsunoko Productions, Japan) subsequently tripled and quadrupled out of reach. No more future Robotech projects are being planned by Harmony Gold. Director Carl Macek, who is no longer with Harmony Gold, could not be reached for comment.

For fans intent on getting the series in its entirety, Robotech II is already available from Ballantine Books in a thorough, five-volume novelization under

Letters to the Arts & Entertainment Editor

Editor,

In response to the "George Bush is Really Elvis" review on the Coverup movie in the Summer Bruin, August 29, I must say a few words.

The sickness prevalent in our government today is not new, but the present administration has given it a whole new light. The sickness is a disease, like that of an alcoholic. It has progressed to a point where it has degraded itself almost beyond any recognition. It is now extremely pitiful and has become incomprehensibly de-moralized.

Our nation, as a people, has been numbed by an administration that, to quote a man from the film Coverup, "is impossible to embarrass." The blatant disregard for the Constitution and the people it is supposed to govern (not to mention the actual earth it is deemed on destroying) is the most disgraceful in history.

The film by the Empowerment project IS NOT "a piece of nonsense" and IS NOT preaching "mainly to the already converted."

It IS a timely, urgent message that you ain't going to hear on the 6, 7 or 11 o'clock news. In the papers, it is getting minute coverage, stuffed usually behind furniture advertisements, if at all..

Why? Because the networks and newspapers are owned by the same people who have bought and sold most of the politicians involved in this ROYAL SCAM. If they expose this stuff, it's like cutting their own throats.

What Coverup IS is a grassroots attempt at getting the message to the public who are UNAWARE, most of whom have little or no access to this particular message due to the nature of the ownership of the media.

There are international gangsters who, under the guise of "Democracy," bring down democratic nations; kill hundreds of thousands of innocent civilians; and run drugs and guns. They consider themselves and their self-seeking mission to be above not only the Constitution of the United States, but above the law period.

God help people like Jim Pickrell who conclude that the Iran/Contra affair cover-up is an event of entertainment, to be weighed against perhaps turning on a football game or MTV.

Ollie North is just the beginning. There are many more nameless ones who are making billions — not for the sake of the U.S., but for their own damn ass. They say what they know you want to hear, that's all.

I was informed by the film, enlightened by the dedication of a small, grass-roots attempt to expose the madness (yes, it is corny, isn't it? To be for something as old-fashioned as justice, truth, democracy — the real kind, liberty, freedom, etc . . .), the disease that pervades our executive, legislative and judicial branches of government of this great land of ours.

If Mr. Pickrell's "biggest disappointment" was a lack of Pink Floyd music, then obviously he was not the man to have been writing the review to begin with. This film had as much to do with rock music as with the man on the moon. (The song chosen was the most poignant unusual and exciting performance. His anguishing yet liberating songs provided some of the evening's most poignant moments. He shared the love ballad "Don't give Up" with Tracy Chapman.

Gabriel closed with what has become his trademark song, "Biko," written for Black Consciousness student leader Stephen Biko, murdered by South African police in jail in 1977.

As always, Gabriel sang the lyrics as if they were torn from him. The powerful song, with its "You can blow out a candle, but you can't blow out a fire" chorus, ended Gabriel's show on a solemn, heart-wrenching note..

Sting opened his set with "King of Pain," assisted by a skillful jazz ensemble featuring saxophonist Branford Marsalis. In a glorious set that included "If You Love Someone, Set Them Free," Sting and the band glistened with a percolating intensity.

The celebratory "One World is Enough (For All of Us)" had Sting dancing the twist. The set ended with bright "Freedom Tonight," with its tough funk and an amazing extended jam at the end.

Then Springsteen came out and sang "Every Breath You Take" with Sting. Enough said.

Hitting the the stage at 12:30 a.m., Bruce and his E Street band crashed into "Born in the U.S.A." The Boss' set was vintage rock, featuring his best blasts from the past such as "The Promised Land," "Thunder Road," and "Cadillac Ranch."

He even revived the rarely-performed "Jungleland" from 1975's breakthrough Born to Run album. The set evoked memories of Bruce in his younger glory days, playing at break-neck speed like there's no end in sight.

On "The River," he was joined by "new best friend" Sting; as on "Every Breath You Take," Springsteen's rough, rumbling tones provided a suitable counterpoint to Sting's smoother vocals.

Springsteen's music and lyrics about freedom reflected the tour's message quite well. According to the singer, he first learned about freedom from the early rock 'n' roll songs that he heard on the radio. "They were all about one transcendent moment of freedom," he said in the introduction to "My Hometown."

"There are human rights being violated in this very city," he cautioned. "Whenever You see a homeless man or woman on the street, there are human rights being violated."

He also urged Americans to free themselves from the "isolation that is burning us up in this country. We have to join the world community. And we must use our freedom to help others win their freedom."

Overcome by the event, Springsteen dashed toward the fans to touch hands with them, destroying the distance between performer and audience. At the end of his rousing set, the tour principals came up together to trade verses on Bob Dylan's majestic "Chimes of Freedom" and Bob Marley's call to action "Get Up, Stand Up."

As the crowd meandered to the gates, you cannot help but feel that once again, rock 'n' roll has been able to bring people together, that no other art form can evoke its democratic and communal essence. The best in rock 'n' roll can draw people together like nothing else, and Amnesty's concert was a testament to that power.

overlapping," he said. "In the interior scenes what you first hear are footsteps with a mumbling, then the door opening until you hear clear voices. Strangely enough it immediately conveys as if a camera was panning in.

"The sound of a voice can make the imagination of the listeners build an entire physical and emotional character," the director said. "I have a 60 year-old woman who has a remarkably light girlish voice playing a girl of 18 and you close your eyes and you hear that the character with the voice imposed is that of a very young girl with long hair who is very innocent."

The four KCRW productions — The Long Voyage Home, Moon of the Carribees, In the Zone, and Bound East For Cardiff — are the first plays Quintero has ever produced for radio.

Quintero cometh

With his KCRW tribute, the director of more than 50 Broadway and Off-Broadway productions is doing for California what he did for the Eastern Establishment in 1956 by reviving interest in the Nobel Prize-winning playwright. That revival of The Iceman Cometh (his first O'Neill production) was staged by a New York theater group that he co-founded. Many consider Quintero to be responsible for the renaissance of interest in O'Neill.

"After we did The Iceman Cometh and it became a great success, what was absolutely remarkable to me was that almost every reviewer mentioned the fact that O'Neill had to be re-evaluated," said the Panamanian-born director. "That meant that they had already discarded O'Neill. It's unbelievable! The greatest playwright this country ever had was totally forgotten and (consigned to) oblivion."

Quintero also directed the premiere of Long Day's Journey Into Night after O'Neill's widow granted him the rights to it — despite the fact that the playwright did not want it produced until 25 years after his death.

By that time everyone was clamoring to stage the tragedy, Quintero said. When O'Neill's widow asked him to do the play Quintero was so overwhelmed that he was speechless.

"The staggering thing about Long Day's Journey Into Night is that O'Neill sees this to be an autobiographical play but it becomes a universal family," said Quintero.

"On opening night I invited my sister who lives in Panama to come to the opening. At the end of the play she came back stage and rushed into my arms and she was crying. She said to me, 'Jose, how could you! How could you expose mama and papa like that? And I said, 'It wasn't me it was Mr. O'Neill.'"

This year Quintero directed Long Day's Journey Into Night for the second time, at the Neil Simon Theater in New York. It ran with Ah Wilderness! a comedy that has the same setting as Long Day's Journey Into Night directed by Arvin Brown, joining the fantasy and the reality of O'Neill's youth.

"In every play that he has done he has illuminated parts of my life and more than that he has made me sharpen my tools as a worker in the theater," he said. "He has been my teacher.

See SEA, Page 43

He has forced me to become economical, to become as pure as he had become in his last plays. As you see in Long Day's Journey Into Night, there is not a prop. There is nothing but people baring their souls through dialogue. All the things he tried and went through to achieve the ultimate simplicity he imposed upon me as an artist and I had to meet that challenge."

Quintero's latest production of Long Day's Journey Into Night (starring Jason Robards and Colleen Dewhurst) has finished its run on Broadway and will move to Washington D.C. in November.

The director's Catholic upbringing plays a part in his identification with O'Neill's work.

"We both renounced membership in the Roman Catholic Church but once a Catholic always a Catholic," he said. "The ritual of the church is too heavily imprinted in our very souls. It has a great deal to do with my understanding of theatrical rituals and so it did with O'Neill."

Books for the misbegotten

Periods of alcoholism have affected both Quintero and O'Neill, who portrayed alcoholism in such plays as The Iceman Cometh. "I began writing the book If You Don't Dance They Beat You after a very serious bout with alcoholism," Quintero said. "I was not strong enough to work and most everyone in the theater knew I was drinking and therefore wouldn't trust me to direct a play. Neither did I want to direct a play while I was drinking. The theater has been sort of a religious experience for me and I did not want to mar it. So when I began to taper off I needed some occupation and I began to write. The book was the one that pulled me out onto shore, as it were. By the end I was not drinking at all."

Three other books, all edited by Travis Bogard, are being published this year to commemorate the O'Neill Centennial. Bogard, artistic director of the S.S. Glencairn plays and a renowned O'Neill scholar, has compiled The Unknown O'Neill, previously unpublished plays by O'Neill, The Eugene O'Neill Songbook, a collection of 70 pieces of music that O'Neill used in his plays, and The Collected Plays of Eugene O'Neill, three volumes of O'Neill plays.

Bogard attributed the flagging interest in O'Neill in Southern California to its location being "a little more spread out on the coast . . . so it is harder to organize . . . and get the heads of all the big theaters together."

O'Neill's timeless appeal

O'Neill has never been more popular and recognized all over the world than he is today, Quintero said.

"He understands the theater as an almost religious experience where the absolute truth should be expressed, where man can go and see a projection of himself," said Quintero. "(Critics) say O'Neill is dark and foreboding. But he exalts man as he fights his way through the obstacles that are almost insurmountable that life raises in front of him.

"(O'Neill) uses the English language to build enormous dramatic structures "that loom like pantheons like coliseums, on the cultural horizon of the Unit-make-up of the city. "As it changes, our program has to change," said the director. "In the fall of 1990, we'll have a major Pacific Rim arts festival because that's where the emphasis of the make-up of our city is." To Wadsworth, the Pacific Rim ranges from South America to China to Japan to Australia — all the regions that exert an influence on the sociocultural make-up of Los Angeles.

The final and perhaps most important concern of the Center is acting as a bridge between the university and the community. "The university sits in a very white, rich neighborhood, to say the least," said Wadsworth, emphasizing the need to make the public from the rest of metropolitan L.A. feel comfortable when coming to UCLA. "Hopefully, out of that bridge then young students will say 'Gee, I want to come to UCLA and study,' so that we're a link."

Reaching out to the Community

A significant part of the Center is the sharing program, which brings students by bus from various school districts to campus for performances at Royce Hall. "These students can have an experience on campus and can come home and feel that UCLA is not this big scary thing," said Wadsworth. "And the information we hand out to them is how they can apply to UCLA."

To Wadsworth, the Center is a significant means whereby UCLA can acquire a more human face, instead of appearing as a monolithic institution that may prove intimidating to the general community.

According to her, the Center is also planning a program next year incorporating lectures by UCLA faculty at the performances. "So that if you come to music or dance performances, we'll have one of our professors talk and explain the program, so that you'll get a lot more out of it, and you won't feel so alienated."

Anti-elitist ideal

Wadsworth is adamant about destroying the aura of elitism that may surround arts performances. "We're trying to say that the arts are for everybody," she uttered. "It's part of your daily life. You can't separate the arts from somebody's life, like you can't separate health from someone's life."

According to Wadsworth, the Center's sharing program manifests this anti-elitist orientation. "You've got to have the arts to stay alive, just like you've got to eat to stay alive. It's not just this elitist thing that you go to. You don't just go to a concert once a month, and that's the arts. We're trying to make it a part of people's lives. That's the goal of our sharing program, where we bring kids in from all over L.A. you have to touch people when they're young."

Wadsworth has also been responsible for moving the thrust of the Center away from a preoccupation with Western European culture.

"The Pacific Rim project is directed by Judy Mitoma (coordinator of the World Arts & Culture program)," said Wadsworth. "That's what makes our Center so special. We have the ability to draw from the best faculty the world over, who say that we should come, we should be represented here. We can rely on this faculty and on the people that they know."

See ARTS, Page 45

Arts

Campus apathy

Wadsworth is unhappy that more students do not know about the Center's programs, that the arts on campus are not being covered and appreciated as they should be.

"It's a shame. UCLA has the most diverse, largest cultural program of any university in the country," she said. "It's on a par with the Kennedy Center, the Lincoln Center. And yet you can go into the community at UCLA, and the students don't know about it. 30 to 40% of our audience is students, so there should never be an empty seat."

According to Wadsworth, most of the artists who come to perform on campus, when offered an interview with the L.A. times or the Daily Bruin, would rather come to the students. "These artists come to UCLA because it's a university," said Wadsworth. "They want the interaction with the students."

The best of everything

The diverse range exhibited by the Center for the Performing Arts makes it an ideal middleground where artists from different fields to meet to work on new pieces.

According to Wadsworth, the Center commissions many new pieces, bringing together artists who may not even know each other. "Hopefully, as the arts on campus change under new organizations, students and faculty will be part of this process," said Wadsworth. "So it will be a marriage of it all."

A Herculean amount of organizing goes into the planning for the programs in order to achieve the diversity toward which the Center strives. Most events are confirmed two or three years in advance. "We want the diversity to serve the community," said Wadsworth. "We do bring the best of everything here. Students, when they see something for the first time, should see the best so that they will like it, are turned on by it, and come back."

According to Wadsworth, the programming does not reflect the taste of the Center or the Chancellor. "It reflects what we think the community's taste is."

Student push and pull

According to Wadsworth, what makes the programming for the Center of the Performing Arts so exciting and diverse is that it actively seeks to work with students. The Center maintains a close relationship with the Student Committee for the Arts. This interface with students have helped to maintain the extraordinary level of diversity and quality that marks the Center's programming.

Student input provided the impetus behind the advent of Performance Art on campus. "Six or seven years ago, students from the Committee said that we're putting out this neat series called 'Performance Art,' and I went, what are you talking about?" recalled Wadsworth. "They educated me, the Center and different faculty about Performance Art."

Out of this, the Center for the Performing Arts has become one of the leading presenters of this art form, according to Wadsworth. "If it hadn't been for students who were constantly ed States.

"You aren't aware of the rhythms inherent in an O'Neill work until you begin working with them," Quintero continued. "He has been criticized for what critics have termed his rough language and his lack or poetry but I beg to differ with them. It is true he may be rough as the bark of a tree is rough but there is a lyrical quality inherent in the writing of O'Neill that, like in The Hairy Ape, turns the work into a massive poem."

challenging us, coming us to say we want to do this, we want to do that, our programming wouldn't be so diverse."

Student input has not only provided challenges for far-out new art forms, but has also ensured that older, more traditional arts will be represented in the Center's annual programs.

"We decided one year that financially, we could not do a big vocalists series, because they're expensive," said Wadsworth. Student reaction was immediate. "It was the students who came to us and said we can't do that, there are an X amount of students studying voice; if you don't continue to present it, how do they hear the ways, and how will students at large be expose to it? So we went and brought back the great vocalists series."

According to Wadsworth, students keep the Center at a healthy balance. "They are always challenging us, saying why are you doing this, and why aren't you doing this? Where I think a lot of my colleagues at other campuses don't have this constant battering and questioning that's really important," said Wadsworth.

From Kronos to Queen Ida

Wadsworth admitted that although she loves all art forms, she has more appreciation for some than others. "I love dance. Dance to me means music, means visual arts, means architecture with the sets," she said, "and that's one of the reasons I'm so supportive of maintaining the dance program as it is."

Wadsworth is looking forward to the dance program next year, as well as the commission pieces the Center has helped to create. "To me, the David Gordon 'United States' piece and Philip Glass's '1000 Airplanes On the Roof' will be exciting."

The jazz series is another highlight. "The concert that is almost sold out that really surprises me is the Queen Ida concert," said Wadsworth. "She's wonderful. If students go see the Kronos Quartet, they'll think that it's quite an experience.

"If students read about these events, they'll go," she continued, adding that students are assured the best seats in Royce Hall, "one of the best performance halls in the country."

In ending, Wadsworth stressed that students' registration fees support the Center's programming. "If it weren't for that, we wouldn't be here. Students should understand and be proud that they support the arts program at UCLA."

'Parador'

in and take over the country himself. Certainly there's nothing in his way.

Jonathan Winters is always fun, sort of blitzing through the movie with improvised lines, playing a retired American expatriot who turns out to be working for the CIA.

The best parts of the movie are when Dreyfuss first starts in as dictator and can't seem to get it right, but the scene that sticks in your mind the most is Dreyfuss leading the Paradorans in aerobics on national television.

However, while the movie is good fun, it comes up a little short on the plot and logic side. Richard Dreyfuss is never forced to make any difficult decisions, and I'm not even sure why they needed an actor for dictator. It is also never clear what the political issues are in Parador. The military is bad because they are a bunch of neo-Nazis, but we never have any idea what the rebels or the people or even the generals themselves want, nor do we get a clear idea of what the CIA is up to (though it is probably safe to assume that we are against it.)

A great film like Dr. Strangelove is a classic comedy and a great movie because the issues underneath the humor are clear-cut and the urgency of the characters is immediate. Moon Over Parador is good fun and almost on the verge of political satire, but it never really connects with the issues.

'Out'

on promises, as the "reserve clause" blocked them from negotiating with anyone else. To compound problems, the team was split into factions that were barely on speaking terms.

Eight Men Out is John Sayles' version of the story, based on the book by Eliot Asinof. It's a difficult subject, but Sayles has made a great film out of one of the most legendary events in baseball history.

Michael Rooker as Chick Gandil and Don Harvey as Swede Risberg are completely believable both in their attempts to persuade the other players to join the scheme, and in their desperation as the plot gradually unravels.

John Cusack (The Sure Thing) is effective as Buck Weaver, the third baseman who refused to participate in the fix, but was penalized for not turning in his friends. D.B. Sweeney is outstanding as Shoeless Joe Jackson, who played flawless ball and led the Series in hitting, but shared the same fate as Weaver and the others: they were banned for life from baseball.

The rest of the cast is excellent, including minor roles played by Studs Terkel (as one of the journalists who discovers the fix), Charlie Sheen (as player Hap Felsch), and Sayles himself, as journalist Ring Lardner — hometown sports writer and humorist who was good friends with many of the players.

Much of the filming of Eight Men Out took place in Cincinnati as well as Indianapolis' Bush Stadium, dressed to look like Comiskey Park, c. 1919. Art, costume and overall production design are excellent, and have a genuine period feel, despite a budget of $6.5 million that is low by studio standards.

Broadway

endeavors, should be nothing less than a night of enchantment.

Finally a taste of things hopefully to come. Unlike Phantom, which started its Broadway run in January and is due in L.A. early next year, L.A.'s David Henry Hwang's Broadway debut M. Butterfly, which opened in March starring John Lithgow and B.D. Wong, shouldn't be too far behind.

Based on a true story that's stranger than fiction, the play centers around the Englishman Rene Gallimard who for 17 years divulged national security secrets to a Chinese Communist man he truly believed was a woman. Even after being exposed, Gallimard still insisted the man he was in love with was a woman. Staged in the grand tradition of the Chinese opera, an elegantly sparse stage is attended by Chinese servants. The music is directed by UCLA graduate Lucia Hwong.

It's a wonder how Broadway can carry so many plays simultaneously, even at prices some fifty-percent greater than those in L.A. But the bottom line is that a city supports the number of plays that it can. For L.A. that generally means about one "biggie" at time. Unfortunately, L.A. is content to remain so.

For instance, students are not taking nearly the advantage they can of resources such as student rush tickets. There is some wonderful theater available to students at greatly reduced prices and this may be the last time they have the opportunity to see "Broadway" theatre at prices that are as low.

Bowl

chestra, K. 491, and Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor. The Debussy piece was done to perfection, the strings faultless in the high registers, and with admirable work from the solo harp and winds. Previn was soloist in the Mozart concerto, with the piano turned towards the orchestra and cover removed so that he could conduct from the keyboard. The haunting pathos and sense of dramatic conflict in this extraordinary concerto — one of only a handful the composer wrote in a minor key — were powerfully evoked by the soloist and orchestra. Previn concluded the program in a big way with a rip-roaring, all-the-stops-pulled-out performance of the Tchaikovsky Fourth Symphony.

The Sept. 14 concert presented one of the most entertaining evenings of jazz this reviewer has ever heard. Clarinetist Pete Fountain was in fantastic form in a program of Dixieland jazz. He was supported to the hilt by an incredible group of sidemen. They occupied the first half, and it went by entirely too quickly.

Vibes player-extraordinaire Lionel Hampton was equally fantastic playing his different style of jazz in the program's second half. He has assembled a fabulous orchestra over the years, made up of saxes, trumpets, trombones, congas, piano, bass and drums, and they played like all get out. Hampton showed himself to be as versatile on the drums as he is on vibes — and is not a bad singer either. Jazz vocalist Ernestine Anderson was in splendid form in a number of old chestnuts, which received stylish accompaniment from the orchestra.

Barker

person is to see the face of God.' His whole story is just a matter of love and how that has affected his life and how he handles it."

However, as an understudy there are certain constraints Barker must be aware of. As an understudy he's "geared to approach it (Valjean) as you fit in with the company. They (the production company) allow me to do my interpretation, but within the bounds that are established by Bill (William Solo, who ordinarily plays Jean Valjean), as far as physically and blocking-wise. They have specific points like, you can do this, but we need to have this."

With either show he knows he's "successful if telling the story. We don't care if people stand up at the end, as long as they got the message of the show."

In the role of Valjean, Barker has the most fun at the fact he "loves to age so much. I'm just old enough that I can go that way and have a little maturity up here to carry it off."

About his two different shows, Barker remarked, 'My normal show is all about just giving the energy. I have 17 costume changes. It's busier from the offstage than it is on. As demanding as (the role of Valjean is), it's easier in a way because I go out there and I'm doing one thing and it's the real focus. I have a song, or I'm doing something, rather than being one of the lot and worrying, OK, my next costume change I've got to get near that exit because it I ride the turntable too far I've got to go out of the way and get run over by the cart or this and that."

Barker's beginnings are tied to his childhood. "I started out in Oregon, I was going to be a teacher, then I realized I didn't want to be a teacher because everybody graduating at that time was. It was in the teacher boom. My teacher in school was a professional opera singer who'd gone back to teaching and then got fed up with the system and was going to go back (East). I moved back east with his family. He was going to try and get me into the Eastman School of Music. I hadn't had enough training to even get in at that time. I just started auditioning and just started doing theatre and sort of just got my experience that way. And it's turned out to be the best schooling."

Barker's advice to students is "Don't put deadlines on yourself. I went through a period where I said I've got to make it within five years or ten years and then I go I didn't make it because I'm not doing this or I the common title The Sentinels. Comic adaptations of the 65 episodes will also be available from Eternity Comics starting this November. Donning Company is preparing a bound pictorial of Robotech II. No release date is yet available.

Robotech II promises to feature a plot full of the intrigue, treachery and romance that made Robotech a crossover hit to adults as well as younger audiences. Fans will not be disappointed: good old action and male-bonding will be there as well.

Robotech II has not been scheduled to be televised in the near future. However, it is already available on home video through Palladium Books. Harmony Gold has packaged Robotech II into a triple feature called Animation Adventure Theater which will also include the Japanese films The World of Talisman and Once Upon a Time.

Robert Richardson (director of photography in Platoon and several other Oliver Stone pictures) shows how vital lighting and camera work are in the final look and feel of a film, even though this kind of work seldom receives the fame and acclaim that the more visible actors and directors get.

Some people will be put off by Eight Men Out with its ensemble style (no hero) and the deviation from the traditional Hollywood story format.

According to director Sayles, "You may be able to change the ending of The Natural, where the guy strikes out in the book but hits a home run in the movie, but this is history. Nobody is going to buy it if you say 'OK, they decided not to throw it after all, and they win the World Series.' So it automatically does not have a Rocky kind of ending."

But Eight Men Out is a fascinating, gripping movie. While you can never really endorse the decisions these men made, you come to appreciate the pressures that made them do it. It is a measure of the quality of the film that even though there are a large number of characters, you go home with the feeling that you know each of them intimately.

And the story — this is the stuff of epics, of myths. It is not just about baseball as a backdrop for a romance, or baseball as a background for a murder mystery, but it is a story about baseball itself — grown men playing a game for boys. It's one of the best movies to come out for a long time, and definitely worth seeing.

set unfair deadlines on yourself. I went through a period where I said I've got to make it within five years or ten years and then I go I didn't make it because I'm not doing this or I set unfair goals. Some people are very lucky and do very well and make it quickly. Making it to me is just working steadily; it's not being a star, not doing this or that. If you can work consistently in the business that's successful. It's a matter of just hanging in there and if it's something you want, just keep working for it."

song to be used, because the bottom line in this tale IS "Money.")

Pickrell, like so many Americans, has become numbed to reality and is in search of the entertainment value available. We live in a land of addicts. Addicts of entertainment. Why do you think we have Ronnie in the White House? Addicts voted him in. Entertainment junkies. They all need to go to a rehabilitation program. They are addicted to feeling numb.

We live in a land where the wife of the president cries out "Just Say No" and then embraces the VERY MEN (at the White House, no less) who carry out the transfer of heroin and cocaine into OUR COUNTRY!

Stop, children, what's that sound? (Guns? Crack pipes?) Everyone look what's going down . . . That's some music. That's some real music.

This ain't Watergate; this ain't no disco, this ain't no fooling around. We MUST become armed. Armed with information. Armed with education. Armed with Intelligence (NOT the Central Agency variety, thank you). Armed with dedication to preserve what's left of a democracy gone mad. Armed with love. Love for our country. Love for our Constitution. Love for our people. Love for our planet. Love of the Truth. Love for Reality.

My vote is for the truth. It is a frightening time in which we live — but "turning on and tuning out" '60s-style is not going to work now. We need to fight the good fight. We need to unite against the madness and JUST SAY NO.

We need to wake up and smell the coffee and realize we are sitting in it and it is burning our very crotch.

Musical

Threepenny Opera a couple years back.

Les Miz won the Tony for Best Musical of 1987, with good reason. The lyrics by Alain Boublil and Claude-Michel Schonberg (with additional English text by Herbert Kretzmer) go a long way in conveying the all-encompassing range of emotions evoked in Victor Hugo's monumental 19th-century French novel, one of the world's supreme literary treasures. (I am still searching desperately for a copy of Boublil/Schonberg's original French version of the musical.)

I wholeheartedly recommend that you go see the live production if you can; L.A. boasts an overall superb — though not perfect — production at the Shubert Theater. (There is a welcome student discount on the tickets.)

And if, like me, you love theater that makes you cry, laugh and think all in one evening, you will also want the soundtrack beside you for a perpetual, richly rewarding aural experience that is much more than a mere souvenir of the musical. I have not stopped listening to the tape since I first got it over a month ago.

With every new listening, the score reveals something new. Its power remains undiluted and inexhaustible. As does Hugo's 1000-page novel, the music and lyrics fervently capture the ebbs

ROBIN WARSHAW
WITH AN AFTERWORD BY MARY P. KOSS, PH.D.
Date Rape: Society offers a thousand excuses, from "She was really asking for it" to "Boys will be boys." Many people don't even realize that it's a crime. Women pay a high price for these attitudes. The Ms. survey found that one college woman in four has been a victim of rape or attempted rape and that one college man in twelve has been an assailant.
This ground-breaking book documents the problem and explores its human dimensions in moving case histories. Best of all, it offers solutions—from prevention and healing to how to change the attitudes of parents, educators and lawmakers.

and flows of human emotions and experience: love, hate, death, youth, old age, compassion, justice, revolution, peace, friendship, greed, mercy, laughter.

If you want passionate, varied, infinitely enriching and listenable musical theater, go see the musical and buy the score. You can't do much better than Les Miz.

This soundtrack to the Broadway production of Les Miz is a wonder to listen to. The entire cast is excellent. Each actor seems to have been born for their role: full-throated Com Wilkinson as the kind ex-convict-turned-saint Jean Valjean; steely-voiced Terrence Mann as morally-stalwart, unbending police inspector Javert; hilarious Leo Burmeister as the misanthropic innkeeper Thenardier.

Nevertheless, it is the actresses in the major female roles who steal the show. Not incidentally, they also have the best songs to sing, in a program full of scintillating tunes.

As the unfortunate young mother Fantine, Randy Graff delivers the heartbreaking "I Dreamed a Dream," my personal favorite. Judy Kuhn is radiant as Fantine's illegitimate daughter Cosette, rescued from brutal squalor by Valjean, and whose love and marriage with the student revolutionary Marius provides the brightest gleam of hope in Les Miserables.

Of all the characters, though, none shines more brightly (albeit fleetingly) than Frances Ruffelle as tragic Eponine, victim of unrequited love. Her "On My Own" is an achingly poignant highlight of the musical.

'Phantom'

Opera House and exerts strange hypnotic powers over audience and performers, Webber's new musical (with lyrics by Charles Hart/additional lyrics by Richard Silgoe) offers an unparalleled sonic treat. I can't wait to see it when it comes to L.A.'s Ahmanson Theater next spring.

Tunes such as "Angel of Music," "All I Ask of You," "Music of the Night," "The Point of No Return" and the trademark descending organ refrain to the "Phantom" theme combine to make this Webber's most compelling score yet.

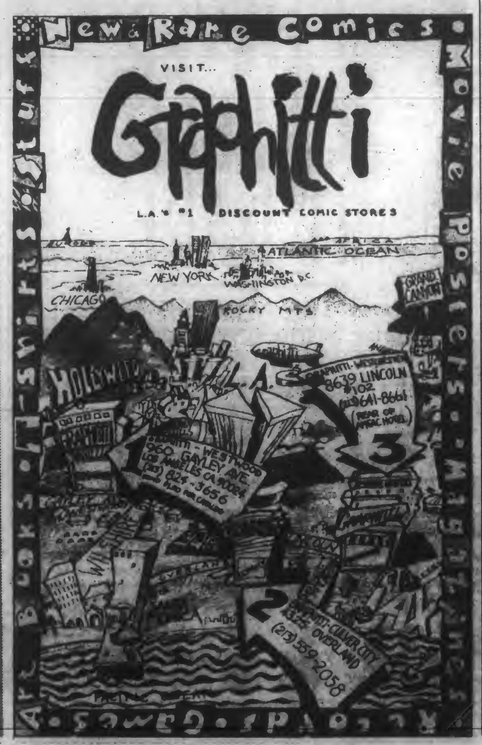
The two stars, Michael Crawford as the Phantom and Sarah Brightman as soprano Christine Daae, turn in spellbinding performances (Crawford won the Tony for Best Actor in a Musical this year).

Webber's major weakness still glares here, though: an inability or reluctance to evoke a wide range of emotions in his music. Sadness, awe and desperation predominate in this score; there is little evidence of humor or other feelings.

I realize that Phantom of the Opera belongs in the "thriller" genre, which limits the scope of emotions Webber can work in. But that is no excuse for his shortcomings in conveying breadth of characters, in making them more sympathetic and believable.

As in much of his past work, Webber seems to have sacrificed character development and emotions in favor of awesome spectacle. I would have preferred a little more individuality and idiosyncrasy differentiating the characters, so that they don't all seem to blend together.

See WEBBER, Page 53



Webber

However, Webber's verve and flair for moving melodies ultimately work to pull the score right along.

While this soundtrack of Phantom (recorded by the original London cast) does not possess a show-stopping stunner like Cats' "Memory" or Evita's "Don't Cry for Me Argentina," it is on the whole more consistent and coherent than Webber's past works. From the auctioneer's holler at the start to the final resounding cry of "Music of the Night," Webber's score to the dark drama shimmers with majestic melodies and soaring voices.

Notwithstanding the score's flaws, Phantom is worth seeing based on the music alone. (I hear the costumes and sets are amazing, too. Also refer to theater wrap-up by Alex Chun on page 34.)

Chapman

rock music with a socially-conscious lyrical content to create songs that are both moving and thought-provoking.

Although one may be slightly reminded of Suzanne Vega's last album Solitude Standing when listening to Chapman's, a main difference between the two stem from their singing styles.

Unlike Vega's soft voice, Chapman's is powerful and deep, as can be heard in the songs "Fast Car" and "Talkin' Bout a Revolution".

Another of Chapman's strong assets is her songwriting skills. Each song deals with problems she believes the world faces today, such as poverty, racial tension, hunger and wife abuse.

All the songs are worthy, but there are two highlights. The stirring "Fast Car" reached the Top Ten; "Talkin' Bout a Revolution" is a short but dynamic song suggesting a rebellion by poor people.

"Fast Car" is unarguably Chapman at her best, evoking feelings of desperation. She sings about a woman who longs to leave her depressed lifestyle in which she "works as a check-out girl," her father "lives with the bottle," and her lover "stays out drinking late at the bar."

"Talkin' Bout a Revolution" warns people to be aware of an uprising by the poor. According to Chapman, "the tables are starting to turn" as "poor people . . . rise up" and "take what's theirs." These depressed folks, writes Chapman, are those who stand in the welfare lines, cry at the doorsteps of the Salvation Army and "waste time" in the unemployment lines.

Other notable cuts include the explosive "Why," which asks questions with obvious yet constantly avoided answers as "Why should babies starve if there is enough food to feed the world?" "Across the Lines" talks about how racial tensions are killing "the dream of America."

Some of Chapman's lyrics may seem simple, as in "Talkin' Bout a Revolution," where she repeats the lyrics twice in the two-and-a-half-minute song. However, the simplicity of some of her songs doe not lessen the overall impact of the album. With her smooth yet at times electrifying voice, her lyrics — whether simple or complex — give the listener a forceful lesson about what Chapman believes are the realities of this world.

Kafka

manifested by marriage (and symbolized, in Kafka's haunting novel, by the castle which he could never reach no matter how he tried).

These are remarkable letters. Never trivialized by excessive sentimentality, they possess a passionate, heartfelt yet intellectually elevated essence that makes the reader never embarrassed by the uneasy thought that they are reading a man's most private thoughts.

The words convey the moods and feelings of a tormented man revealing his innermost feelings to his beloved, struggling to reconcile his seemingly opposite needs — to write and live, or to join the ranks of ordinary existence, abandon writing and die.

Kafka depended on Felice Bauer to give him strength and support. "But I write barely enough to let me survive another day," he wrote in 1912, "and remain lazily sitting back, in comfortable lassitude, as though slowly bleeding to death. How gloomily I should have gone to bed if it weren't for you, dearest, to whom I can direct my feeble words, and from whom I shall get them back ten times as strong."

In the early stages of their relationship, Kafka was in Prague and Bauer in Berlin. Across this gap, they wrote each other constantly. Kafka wrote her everyday, sometimes twice a day.

To Kafka, his daily letters to Bauer were indispensable, not least because they allowed him to open up and exorcise the demons that haunt him when he had difficulty composing. Many of the letters reveal Kafka's angst and despair encountered in his writing. "Dearest, I am too tired today, and also too dissatisfied with my work (had I the strength to carry out my innermost intentions, I would pick up all I have written of my novel and throw it out of the window) to write more than a few lines; but write to you I must, and the last words written before going to sleep must be written to you, to make everything at the last moment, awake or asleep, take on a true meaning, such as it never could through my writing."

Some of the letters' most illuminating insights focused on the Kafka's struggle between his solitary work, and his ardent love for Felice. In one instance, he entreated Bauer not to resent his writing:

"Dearest, whatever happens I implore you, with hands raised in supplication, not to be jealous of my novel. If the people in my novel get wind of your jealousy, they will run away from me; as it is, I am holding on to them only by the ends of their sleeves . . . The novel is me, my stories are me — where, I ask you, would there be the tiniest corner for jealousy? I would certainly not detach myself from my novel even in your presence, it wouldn't do me any good if I could, for it is through writing that I keep a hold on life, keep a hold on that boat in which you, Felice, are standing. Sad enough that I don't seem quite able to pull myself in. But bear in mind, dearest Felice, once I lose my writing, I am bound to lose you and everything else."

Kafka was constantly in doubt in his relationship with Felice, and what effect it had on his writing, which was his life. He desperately needed her love and support, but continuously had anxieties about whether he could ever marry and be "normal."

Kafka's health was always very delicate (a vegetarian who could not bear the sight of meat, he was to die early of tuberculosis). Yet he created some of the most memorable and authentic visions of modern alienation and helplessness ever written.

Everything that Kafka produced has value for us. As literature, the most striking of these letters certainly rank with his best fiction. Letters to Felice is a collection of paradoxically cool, calm and collected notes from a most frenetic and fervent mind. It delivers incisive insights into the work and life of a most important and influential stylist and writer-philosopher of the 20th century.

'Drylands'

The photographer's work is superbly reproduced in this sumptuous book. It is generously illustrated with large full-page pictures (some up to 12½x14 in.) which faithfully replicate the 4x5 transparency originals.

There are some knock-out pictures of the Grand Canyon that capture its timeless grandeur and limitless variety of color and form with vivid immediacy. One, a view of of the Colorado River as seen from Dead Horse Point, takes in a particularly impressive vista of the canyon. It is an ideal angle for conveying the breadth and sheer size of this creation of erosion and upheaval over eons of geologic history.

Hyde has included Grand Canyon National Park in the Painted Desert section of the book. It is one of the five desert regions of North America, the others being the Great Basin, the Mojave, the Sonoran and Chihuahuan. The latter two extend from the Southwest U.S. into Mexico.

In the section on the Mojave Desert, which extends through southern California and Nevada, there are wonderful pictures of the Valley of Fire, the Muddy Mountains, Kelso Dunes, and various scenes in Death Valley. In the shot of the Badlands, seen from Zabriskie Point, Hyde has captured the undulating contours of the hills under a luminously golden late afternoon sun. Their coarse texture and bone-dry, barren aspect are marvelously evoked by Hyde's view camera.

In addition to its quality as a work of photography, Drylands also has great value as a document of the differing terrains, flora and fauna to be found in these desert areas. Noted nature writer David Rains Wallace provides valuable information on desert plants and animals in the notes appended to each section, and Vincent Perez has illustrated these with some excellent line drawings. There are six relief maps which are helpful in situating the reader who may never have traveled through the deserts.

When many people think of a desert, the image that comes to mind is often of a a wild, inhospitable, potentially dangerous place. It can be all of these things if not approached in the right way. But it can also be a place of fascinating beauty, evoking one's admiration at the spectacle of nature's grand design. Drylands is probably the finest documentation of the desert's sublime splendor which has ever been published.

Editorial

USAC budget policy is a big zero

As far as setting annual budgets is concerned, apparently USAC would like members of campus groups to forget about the past and concentrate solely on the year at hand. That way, they won't be overly concerned when they find their budgets drastically reduced from one year to the next under USAC's "zero-based" budgeting system.

This year, the budgets of several campus organizations have been reduced nearly 50 percent from last year. Clearly, it's not easy for a student group to plan programming ahead of time (or count on an annual event occurring annually) when it doesn't know whether its budget is going to fluctuate greatly from one year to the next.

Explaining the budgeting process, Finance Committee Chair Mark Arvizu said, "The way we look at it, it's a whole new budget, and it's a whole new year." So, by following the "zero-based" policy, previous budget allocations were totally disregarded when the committee determined budgets for the new year. Then, using a blank slate, the committee claims it calculated each group's willingness to affect or enrich the entire campus, and made appropriations accordingly.

The Black Student Alliance will receive 46 percent less funding than it did last year. The Gay and Lesbian Students Association budget was cut by 30 percent, as was MEChA's, the Chicano student organization. The Campus Events' Commission received a 29 percent cut.

USAC does not want students to think of these as budget cuts. Similarly, among the allocations that are not to be considered increases are the Panhellenic Council's 67 percent hike, the International Students Association's 130 percent boost, and the Interfraternity Council's 72 percent raise.

We are not going to quibble over semantics, because the end result is that some groups have more money than ever, while some have considerably less. And the drastic discrepancies between this year's budget and that of 1987-88, combined with USAC's unwillingness to even face up to the differences, point out the need to abandon the "zero-based" policy altogether.

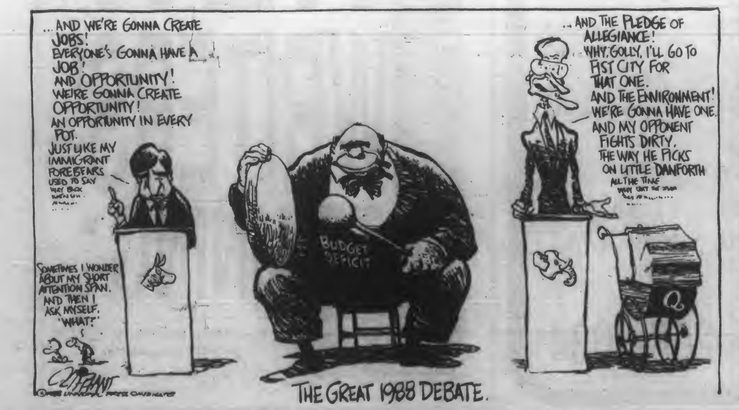
That way, when the members of the budget committee give their own commissions allocation hikes ranging from 37 to 45 percent as they did this year, they will have to at least own up to what they're doing.

USAC should not be able to fall back on the cowardly rationalization of a "zero-based" system. Wildly fluctuating appropriations mark an indiscriminate procedure and irresponsible government. Most legitimate budgeting processes base projections on actual expenditures from the previous fiscal period. This is an option which should certainly be explored by USAC and its finance committee.

By eliminating the current allocation process, perhaps at least a modicum of consistency can be reached and campus groups can be assured of a certain amount of funding each year. Then, there would be less basis for the charges made by many student groups that USAC is biased toward particular groups, depending on which are represented by the most members on the council itself.

If, as USAC Second Vice President Mark Harrington intimates, the current budgets represent an attempt to rectify previous inequities, no increases should be so radical that large cuts must be taken from other organizations all at once. Any such change should be gradual. USAC should have clearly stated that its intent was to make up for what it felt were past wrongs, and begun a process which would alleviate any discrepancies over a period of time.

As it stands now, the present allocation system leaves room for abuse: the spoils system thrives in UCLA politics. And many USAC members won't even admit it.



Auto insurance measures leave rates in high gear

Ken Kecskes

The Los Angeles Times calls it "insured chaos." And no doubt many voters will be confounded by the five auto insurance measures on the November ballot. The text of one initiative, Proposition 104, the "no-fault" measure, is 122 pages long. The others are shorter, but equally perplexing. All of them claim to be panaceas for California's skyrocketing insurance rates. However, the five initiatives — Propositions 100, 101, 103, 104, and 106 — only muddy the true route to reform.

Two leading, diametrically opposed initiatives — Proposition 100, the "good driver" measure sponsored by the Insurance Consumer Action Network, an organization funded by the California Trial Lawyers Assn., and Proposition 104, the no-fault initiative sponsored by the insurance industry — approach the insurance mess from different tacks. Prop. 100 attempts to cap spiraling premiums through rate regulation, and Prop. 104 intends to slash high rates by curtailing the myriad of personal injury lawsuits that sap the insurance industry. Neither measure completely solves the problem: the answer must include both rate regulation and a manageable "no-fault" initiative.

First of two parts

Auto insurance reform is desperately needed in California. Of the 50 states, California ranked third highest; auto insurance premiums averaged about $600. In 1986, the average policy in Los Angeles County cost about $1,100, according to the state Senate's Insurance Committee. An independent research group, A.M. Best Co., which studies costs for the insurance industry, found that auto insurance premiums surged 42 percent from 1984 to 1986. And when every Californian must have auto insurance, the $10-billion-a-year auto insurance industry makes a hefty profit.

But the burden of high rates cannot be blamed on the insurance industry alone. Californians tend to indulge in their right to sue. "Pain and suffering" cases are perverted into a way for both victims and lawyers to make easy money. The slightest fender bender often leads to expensive lawsuits over stiffened necks or sprained ankles.

These petty cases tie up the legal system. Each year, according to the Los Angeles Times, auto accident injury lawsuits account for nearly half our civil court's caseload. And personal injury cases cost taxpayers $8,300 a piece, according to the Rand Corporation's Institute for Civil Justice.

California Insurers plans to eliminate wasteful lawsuits with Prop. 104, the "no-fault" initiative. Prop. 104 makes its case against the lawyers. California Insurers argues that 52 cents of every contested insurance dollar go to lawyers and lawsuits. "Pain and suffering" cases backlog the courts. Taxpayer money, they assert, is wasted on unnecessary lawsuits. As a remedy, they propose a "no-fault" system, where accident victims are guaranteed "rapid" payment of injury claims from their own insurance company — regardless of fault. No-fault eliminates small claims personal injury lawsuits, because victims cannot sue unless damages are "serious and permanent" or if the damages incurred exceed the policy's limit.

Spared of lawsuit abuse, the insurance industry would pass down their savings with a two year, 20 percent cut in personal liability insurance. California Insurers estimates that the cut will shave 7 to 17 percent off today's premiums. Further, the measure cuts attorney's contingency fees, limiting the fees to 33.3 percent of the first $50,000, 25 percent of the next $50,000 and 15 percent of any amount over $100,000.

Currently, 22 states have some sort of no-fault system; some contain Prop. 104's no-lawsuit provision, others allow victims to sue if a monetary limit is reached. Florida, a no-lawsuit model for Prop. 104's no-fault system, averages insurance premiums around $400. A 1985 report by the Department of Transportation found that no-fault "led to reductions in the number of lawsuits," and that "no-fault insurance systems pay a greater percentage of premium income to injured claimants than (states with) traditional liability systems."

But Prop 104's no fault doesn't offer complete coverage for Californians. It covers only personal injury, offering a basic policy of $10,000 for medical expenses and $15,000 for lost wages. The 20 percent cut in personal liability insurance lasts only two years. The measure does not cover damage to automobiles and other property; automobile repairs must still be handled in the same painstakingly slow process. In addition, Prop. 104 preserves the auto industry's present exemption from anti-trust laws. Thus, the measure makes room for collusive practices that take the competitiveness out of the market. Also, the initiative allows insurance companies to keep secret most data on payouts to policyholders and company earnings. And, if Prop. 104 passes, insurance companies do not have to list their rates.

Prop. 104 virtually eliminates any possibility for rate regulation in the future. If Prop. 104 passes

My summer vacation

Whitney Woodward

To say that I had a "fun" vacation, teacher, would not be using the right word. In fact, let's scratch "vacation" all together.

"Purgatory" is what it was. While a lot of my classmates tripped off to Europe or the east coast to explore old frontiers, I stayed in Los Angeles, working and going to summer school. There's nothing more eerie than UCLA without people — you can actually make your way up Bruin Walk without swimming and find a place at North Campus to eat.

Now I don't mean there was no one here on campus; there were swarms of tourists, and every once in awhile, at various intervals, a strange breed of species called "freshmen" were orienting themselves. (I've heard a rumor that somehow they are related to you and me, but I can't exactly remember how. They seemed pretty well behaved, even if they were kind of loud.)

I made friends with maintenance people — a kind old window-washer named "Dell" in particular, who let me into the Bruin Office at 6:15 one morning so that I could retrieve my biology notes. (Did you know that there is a crew of custodians that works all night long so that our campus stays spiffy for visitors? This was news to me.) Dell was just getting off of work when the sun and I arrived. I wondered how he could tell if his window was streaked or not, but I guess night custodians just have a sense for this.

Things here at the Bruin were kind of interesting. The furniture was changed around a lot, for instance.

I got a letter here at the office. I practically donned plastic gloves to open, fearing it was "hate mail." It was actually an ex-mechanic diagnosing my car problem from an earlier column I had written. (Thanks pal!) And here's a good story: All of the Bruin editors went on a "retreat" to Las Vegas, supposedly to discuss policies and what-not. (Uh-huh. Is that before blackjack or at the buffet table?)

While they were away all kinds of strange people came through the door, accosting me because, of course, I tried to duck behind the computer terminal. I now have two bits of important information to share with the campus community (let's get this over with now so that I may be excused from such duty in the future): (1) No, you may not ask me "a stupid question." (That is a stupid question. You're only allowed two and you know it.) ((2) The Classified Window is next door, to the left.

I won't take your personals, no matter how good-looking you are.

Which brings me to another point — my dreary summer night-life. If I wasn't studying, which I did, on occasion, manage to squeeze in between "The Dating Game" and "The Love Connection," I found time to get dressed up and hit the L.A. bar scene (which was probably just as fruitful as those two lame T.V. shows.) Question: If one is approached by a fairly decent person who spews something stupid out of his mouth like: "Hey, are you into fashion? Do you spend a lot of money on your clothes?" or "If I told you that you had a rad body, would you hold it against me (emphasis on the against), how is one supposed to respond? And here is one of the very, very worst lines (simply because the pursuer thinks he is being so clever): Usually the suave fellow will saunter across the dance floor with a smirk on his face, interrupting a conversation you were having with your friends to say, "Wow, you look really bored." As if he were Life's Answer to entertainment.

Lately some female companions of mine have taken over the "approaching" ritual, and do it with a lot more finesse, in my opinion. They simply scan the room for someone who looks interesting, and send them a drink. It may be shallow, but it's effective.

The same can be said for my manner of studying. At $15 per class, I opted to take some of my summer instruction at a local

* New Writers' Training is a prerequisite for working on many student media including The Daily Bruin.

Yo, George Bush!

Michael Katz

My fellow Americans, I want to be your President. They won't let me be Vice-President any more.
— from the proposed campaign speech

It's an open secret that many of us who work in the media seek not just influence, but power. That's why so many college journalists tread on to law school, political careers, ulcers and coronaries.

Out in the real world, this revolving door swings both ways. Richard Burt went from the New York Times to Reagan's State Department. Columnist William Safire went to the Times after writing speeches for Nixon. Bernard Kalb went from NBC to "State," then left. PBS's Bill Moyers is a refugee from the Johnson Administration.

In this column, I abandon all pretense, and offer a proposed campaign speech for would-be President George Bush.

My politics are hardly conservative, but Southern California's are hardly liberal. I doubt Michael Dukakis has many talent scouts locally; besides which, he already has OK speeches. George, however, needs help, and has more money to throw around.

This is the last column I'm going to write on Kraft Macaroni Dinner. From now on, it's caviar. Are you ready, George? Here we go.

First, you need to grab your "wimp" image by the horn rims, and fling it to the ground like so much bull doo-doo. You can best do this by emphasizing your manly record on things like defense:

My fellow Americans, I want to build enough nuclear weapons to kill every man, woman and child in this great world 35 times over. My opponent only wants to build enough to kill them 34 times.

Clearly, this shows that he is soft on national defense. Remember Pearl Harbor! September 7, 1941. Excuse me, December 7, 1914. Something like that.

You should also stress your foreign-policy advantages over Gov. Dukakis:

My opponent is dangerously inexperienced in international affairs. But I will be loyal to America's friends, and my record proves it. When General Noriega needed help, I was there — first as CIA director; then as Vice-President, and as leader of the Executive Task Forces on Drugs and Terrorism. When the Ayatollah needed American arms, I wasn't afraid to help out.

Now, you need to keep laying it on. Link your opponent's image with the "C"-word — Jimmy Carter:

My opponent wants to return us to the doubt and divisiveness of the Sixties and Seventies. But a Bush presidency will heal the wounds of the past, as we move into the future.

It's time we put Viet Nam behind us. That's why I've chosen, as my vice-presidential nominee, Dan Quayle — a Viet Nam-era draft-dodger, and affirmative-action beneficiary.

It's time we put World War Two behind us. That's why I've appointed, as members of my ethnic advisory panel, sympathizers of the German Nazi and Italian Fascist parties. My opponent has done none of these things.

Now, let's drive a wedge right down the center of that old "gender gap":

My opponent is soft on women: he forced a woman to leave her home, and work full-time as his campaign director! Girls, I'll never do that to you. Under a Bush presidency, you'll be free to return to your kitchens, bedrooms and nurseries. I oppose that bad old Equal Rights Amendment, but support a Constitutional Amendment to ban abortion. And I'll give you a Vice President who's cute.

Next comes the delicate task of emphasizing the camaraderie, the continuity, between you and President Reagan — while still demonstrating your independence:

My friends, I've been a loyal servant to President Reagan these last eight years, and I don't regret it. We've had triumphs, we've had defeats, we've had sex.

But now I've got to show that George Bush is his own man, that he can stand on his own feet. I've got to stop picking my nose. I've got to invite Mary Lou to the prom.

Now, let's go after Dukakis' Achilles heels, so to speak. First, law and order:

My fellow Americans, my opponent is soft on crime. He supported a prison furlough program that released a convicted murderer who tried to rape a woman. Back when Ronald Reagan was California governor,

Power of the word and economic censorship on the UCLA campus

Adriana Manjarrez

NOMMO's crisis reflects the plight of American Blacks in the 20th century; although we've survived 20 years of struggle, making so called advancements in civil rights and affirmative action, we find in this era of ultra-conservatism and profit politics that most civil rights legislation is progressively being dismantled. On a note closer to home, the 70 percent attrition rate of Black students, the mainstreaming of AAP (Academic Advancement Program) and the economic censorship plaguing NOMMO, as well as La Gente, seem completely congruent with this trend.

— Julie Fuller,
NOMMO editor-in-chief

NOMMO, the Black/African student newsmagazine is commemorating its 20th year as the voice for the Black/African community at UCLA. It is a commemorable achievement ... given the many cutbacks in space, resources, and money that NOMMO has withstood.

Yet, on behalf of UCLA and ASUCLA (of which the student media is part), NOMMO will be greeted with further cutbacks in funds originally meant for the production of its paper.

Commitment is yet to be seen from the UCLA administration and ASUCLA. So far, these so-called separate entities have only voiced their commitment to "diversity," without offering any real substance.

For example, in May 1987 Chancellor Charles Young agreed to cut the registration fees allocated to the ASUCLA Communications Board. He agreed to phase-out the money during a three-year reduction.

The Registration Fee Advisory Committee based their recommendation to the Chancellor on the fact that the ASUCLA Comm Board has $300,000 with which it was expected it would cover the "overhead" expenses for the student media.

The overhead is the cost for the salary of employees in the publications office and the for plant and maintenance cost.

Ironically, the reg. fees have not directly paid for the production expenses of the student publications, such as printing, working and office supplies, telephone, transportation, etc.

Originally, the Comm Board refused to pay for the overhead expenses with its $300,000 because these funds were destined for the Daily Bruin's new computer system. Instead, it decided to take funds from the student publications, in order to cover for the reg. fee deficit.

But, what is the ASUCLA Communications Board?

The Comm Board is the governing body for the student media; it is also a collective body where members constantly change.

Officially, it is composed of four undergraduates, four graduates, an administrator, a faculty member, a professional, and an alumnus, as well as the Publications Director, who does not vote.

The Board during the summer of 1987 was markedly different from the current one. But last year's Comm Board only enforced what ASUCLA executive director Jason Reed dictated as then interim-publications director, also serving as Chair of the Comm Board.

This was a clear conflict of interest. As a result, the volunteer students in each publication became a crucial part in J.R.'s money-saving endeavors.

He sought inexpensive avenues to pay for the overhead at the expense of student volunteers who without any consultation or options have had to render to the Comm Board a significant amount of money originally meant for their paper's production.

Jason Reed represented the interests of ASUCLA and the interests of the Communications Board while disregarding the Reg. Fee Committee recommendation which states that Comm Board, as part of ASUCLA, is able to pay for the overhead.

ASUCLA and the Comm Board (or just plainly Jason Reed) has brought into question why an enterprise like ASUCLA, which grosses approximately $70 million a year, cannot pay at least for the maintenance of a public University building where the student publications are "caved."

A break with the past

On the other hand, on Sept. 14, the ASUCLA Communications Board finally took a positive step by voting 5-2 to cover half of this year's overhead expenses. It is a proposal that will greatly ameliorate the student publications' economic burden this year.

Comm Board members entered into much debate, with the exception of the undergraduate members, Peggy Lee, former staff member for the Daily Bruin, and Bob O'Connor, last year's Daily Bruin managing editor.

Lee and O'Connor were silent throughout most of the two-

The picture in the cookbook didn't look like that . . .

Glenn Adams

I was baking a cake — or trying to, at any rate. Or, actually, I had passed that point, and now was staring in the oven at something that looked like a piece of matzo bread. Chocolate matzo bread.

It was weird; I mean, I thought I had followed the directions pretty faithfully. And here I was stuck with something that reminded me of the model cars I had assembled as a kid.

So then . . . where was the teaspoon of baking soda during all of this? Well, as near as I could figure, it was with the other residue, stuck to the side of the mixing bowl.

Still, I tried to cheer myself up. After all, this seemed like just one of those times when you have to look on the bright side. I mean, maybe something dramatic would happen in the last five to ten minutes the cake had left in the oven. And, if not, maybe it would taste better than it looked.

And, if nothing else, I could always cut it into little circles and call it a batch of cookies.

This thought only amused me briefly, and then I went to the phone and called Julie. I figured maybe she knew: How much would it cost me if I just went to the bakery and bought a cake.

"What's that?" I asked, about five minutes into our conversation.

"What's what?"

By then, though, I had figured out that it was a siren, and I think it had dawned on her that that was what I was referring to.

So we might as well have just hung up and called it a conversation, I suppose. Nevertheless, we spent the next thirty seconds or so confirming what it was we were both talking about.

It was interesting, in a peculiar sort of way, because Julie was just a couple of blocks from where I was staying, and as the sirens got softer on the phone, they got louder outside the apartment.

Anyway, they got louder and louder and louder, and then they stopped.

Curious, I looked out the window and saw two fire trucks parked directly below.

I wasn't sure what to think. To be honest, I felt a little envious; I mean, I had never managed to find a spot that close.

Parking woes aside, I had to wonder about the guys below dressed in yellow and wearing hard hats. After all, they didn't appear to be leaving. Did they know something I didn't?

But at least it gave Julie and me something to talk about.

"Do you think I'm in any danger here?" I asked. "I mean, maybe I should jump out the window or something."

"Do you see any nets?"

Looking out the window, I said, "You know, it's hard to see *any*thing, really, through all the trees."

"That's not a bad sign, you know."

She had a point. I didn't really want Veteran Avenue turning into Yellowstone National Park or anything.

"Anyway . . . " she said.

"Geez," I said. "It just seems like I should do *some*thing."

"Well, what would your dog do?"

What kind of a question was that? I swear, mention a little thing early in a conversation about your pet's recent trip to the vet and never live it down.

"I don't know. I guess he'd probably bark a couple of times and then take a leak on the leg of the couch," I said. "My dad never lets him in, and we never got around to housebreaking him."

Julie said "anyway . . . " again. I think she wanted to get off the phone or something.

(In case you're interested, though, my dog is a beagle who seems to think he's a German Shepherd. Not that he gets in a lot of fights — or any, really. He just isn't easily intimidated, that's all — though he did look kind of nervous once while walking by a horse. Living in L.A. these days, I kind of miss him sometimes.)

There was still an issue at stake, however. As I said, it seemed like I should do *some*thing.

"Okay, think about it for a second," Julie said. "If you actually saw flames, what would you do?"

"I don't know. Call the fire department?"

"Exactly."

She seemed to be gloating. It didn't matter, though. I wasn't really listening to her anymore — it's kind of a favor I do people sometimes in case they say something stupid.

Besides, in this case, I think I was returning the favor.

"You know, now I even smell smoke," I said. "Maybe I should get out of here."

Julie said something or other. Like I said, I wasn't really listening anymore.

"Hey!" I said. "Isn't my life supposed to pass before my eyes or something? I mean, why not? Maybe it would seem better the second time around."

Julie said something that sounded like it ended in a question.

"The thing is," I said, "I can't even really remember last night. It's been an Exedrin kind of day, in other words.

"It's weird. Beer doesn't seem to affect me anymore. I drink a few, go to sleep, and then I wake up with a headache."

Now the firemen seemed to be looking in my direction. Hmmm.

All in all, I had so many questions left unanswered. Like, if I wrote to her, would Ann Landers consider me an alcoholic? And, if you do it loudly enough, can you make a cake rise simply by yelling at it?

I learned something that night. From Julie. I mean, if you ever get sick and tired of talking to someone — I mean, maybe you're having two entirely separate conversations anyway, and you figure you'd do just as well talking to yourself — all you have to do is say, "Look, I really have to go now." You don't even have to say it nicely.

So, anyway, Julie had other things to do — like sleep, maybe. So did the fire department, apparently. They left too.

What left me alone to tend to the "cake." I had kind of forgotten about it.

I noticed, though, that instead of rising, it had shriveled up. It was thoroughly burnt, and it stank something awful.

I guess, then, when they say, "place in oven for thirty to thirty-five minutes," they mean thirty to thirty-five minutes.

And, sometimes, when you smell smoke, it's best just to check in the oven.

This left me with a slab of charred dough that needed to be thrown away.

I guess it's just natural instinct, however, to try to cover up one's mistakes.

I went back to the cookbook, wondering if maybe the icing would turn out better. ■

COURSE IN THE GRADUATE SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE AND URBAN PLANNING FOR UNDERGRADUATES - FALL 1988.
GSAUP 190: THE HUMAN ENVIRONMENT: AN INTRODUCTION TO ARCHITECTURE AND URBAN PLANNING
What's good or bad about our cities? How can we create better urban environments? This course will challenge you to try to understand the subtleties of people's behavior in the city, what kinds of architecture they want, what kind of planning and controls they are willing to accept. It will challenge you to think in new ways about alternative patterns of living and working and the kinds of environments that are needed to achieve these. Los Angeles provides a rich framework for getting at these questions.

SUMMER: Students who went away didn't miss much here junior college. What a bargain! The first day I walked into my logic class there were people sitting on the floor. I wondered why a class like that would be so popular (people were begging to be let in) until I realized that many of desperate candidates were UCLA English majors like myself, who had put off their "quantitative reasoning" requirement until virtually their last quarter.

Our teacher was a a cross between Michael J. Fox and Bill Murray. Oftentimes he wore a rather devilish glint in his eye, as if he was making up arbitrary logic rules and definitions just to stump us. He told me, dead-pan, that his cat had lost my mid-term, and I never did get it back.

Kind of makes you appreciate old UCLA. When one of the students asked why our teacher didn't have office hours, he said: "because it would exploit me." The state was not paying him for office hour time, he said, and he told us to "talk to Deukmejian if you have a problem with that."

I took another class there, too, but dropped it after the second week. It was a screenplay writing course that was like going to an Alcoholics Anonymous meeting three times a week. Our professor — I'll call him "Chuck" — wrote several screenplays that had been bought by filmmaking companies, but only one of them I think had ever been produced. (If my memory is correct, it was an imitation of one of those horror movies where everyone at camp gets sliced and diced up — not a lot of room for witty dialogue.) Anyway, Chuck used to fall into these black spells of monologue where he would bitterly recount the long, tragic tale of his journey (complete with self-introspection) from computer analyst to screenwriting anonymity.

We also had our chance in the spot-light. The first session we each had to get up and say why we were taking the class. After each person had finished, Chuck just about burst out into spontaneous applause, saying "Great, Great! That really is important, you know, because . . . and then he would go off on a tangent for half an hour. (If one of us had stood up and said: "Hi, my name is so and so, and I'm here because I'm a child molester and I want to write screenplays because I want to lure young teenagers into my mansion," Chuck probably would have said: "Great, Great! That really is important, you know, because . . .)

So that was my summer. You didn't miss much, UCLA, but I'm glad fall is finally here and I can continue doing exactly the same thing I've been doing for the last three months, only with more people around. ■

Czechoslovakians can smell the flowers of a new Prague Spring

By Saul Gonzalez

Czechoslovakians recently observed a grim anniversary. Twenty years ago Soviet tanks rumbled into their nation to abort a bold and accelerating political experiment, an experiment which the Kremlin viewed as a menace to its dominance of Eastern Europe. Despite their ornate anti-imperialist rhetoric, the Soviets were acting in the tradition of the Caesars. Like ancient Rome, Moscow dispatched legionnaires to discipline what it felt was an increasingly wayward and insolent province.

What was Czechoslovakia's crime in 1968? What transgression had it committed to warrant the punishment meted out against it?

While remaining devoted to the broad tenets of communism, the East bloc nation simply attempted to determine its own path of national development. The Czechoslovak leadership of the era recognized that for their system of governance to advance justly, legitimacy would have to be earned among the people and not shackled to them. The Communist Party would have to become an active patron of reformist progress and not a bloated and brooding obstacle.

This momentary period of blossoming liberalization, known as the Prague Spring, was one of he headiest times in recent European history. A nation was detaching itself from tyranny, not through a bloody and clumsy revolutionary carnival, but by humane and purposeful means.

Two decades after the destruction of the Prague Spring, it's the Soviets who are now perched on the soapbox of reform. Greater economic, political and cultural freedoms are now defended as urgent imperatives for the communist fraternity of nations and not odious threats to the continuing proletarian revolution.

The leaders of the Prague Spring were not seeking to become heretics in the eyes of the rest of the Communist world. Quite to the contrary, they argued that it was fidelity to Marxism that compelled them to embark on the reformist process. Stubborn adherence to strict and ever less effective definitions of ideological rectitude would only cultivate stagnation within the system and cynicism among the people. A system of beliefs had to adopt to changing social and political environments or risk suffocating itself. Czechoslovakia wanted other nations under the hammer-and-sickle banner to draw inspiration and new ideas from its liberalizations.

The government of the Soviet Union at the time, though, did not want inspiration and progress notions; it wanted good behavior and complacency within its sphere of influence. Czechoslovakia was not to be a tutor in creative Marxism-Leninism to the vanguard nation of the Communist world. The Russians rewarded their fellow Warsaw Pact member's valiant efforts with an invasion and a purge of broad segments of Czechoslovak society. Moscow justified its actions by enunciating a doctrine which gave itself the authority to determine what was a genuine course of Marxist development in another nation and what was not. The Russians also delegated themselves the responsibility of "rescuing" communist allies that appeared to be straying too far from the faith.

International relations is a field of endeavor riddled with hairpin ironies. Two decades after the destruction of the Prague Spring, it's the Soviets who are now perched on the soapbox of reform. Greater economic, political and cultural freedoms are now defended as urgent imperatives for the communist fraternity of nations and not odious threats to the continuing proletarian revolution. Moscow now encourages and coaxes other communist countries to refurbish or dispose of antique methods of government.

Remembering Soviet interventions in the past, though, East Europeans are hesitant to embrace glasnost or perestroika, particularly in Romania, East Germany and, sadly, Czechoslovakia. They worry that if Gorbachev's daring experiments fail, the Russians will come running back toward ideological rigidity as a safe haven. What would then be the fate of the nations of Eastern Europe?

Yet if the Soviets are successful in their reforms, Eastern Europe will certainly feel the positive repercussions and gain greater confidence in adopting their own programs of glasnost. Perhaps the people of Czechoslovakia will soon benefit from a new Prague Spring, this time with the Soviets providing their blessings instead of their tanks.

Gonzalez is a senior majoring in political science.

Women generally work by choice, not out of economic necessity

William Allen

What is responsible for the spectacular increase in the number of women workers? Thirty years ago, a third of all working-age women were members of the work force. Today, more than half are gainfully employed. Most of this increase has been caused by married women, who account for nearly two-thirds of the increase in the female labor force since 1950. As a result, over half of all married women with children under 6 are now in the labor force.

A popular explanation for this enormous increase in women workers holds that they have entered the labor force out of "economic necessity." Says a senator who is cosponsoring federal funding of child care: "These people who are in the work force today are in there because they have to be." Others agree that most women have been inducted into the labor force by pressures of necessity.

But what does "economic necessity" mean? Perhaps it means that married woman's paychecks rescue their families from destitution. In that case, the cost of not working is so large that few women choose to remain unemployed. But most families in which the husband is the only earner have not been destitute. Indeed, from 1967 to 1983, the median annual income of families with husbands as the sole earner averaged 96 percent of the median income of all families.

The political types . . . seek popular support for a multi-billion dollar government child-care entitlement to buy the votes of middle-income parents. That support is more likely if women's participation in the labor force is seen as the result of grim necessity, not of felicitous choice.

Moreover, if economic hardship is the primary reason why married mothers work, then their rates of labor force participation should vary inversely with the real earnings of their husbands. But the period 1967-83 shows only a slight correlation between labor force participation of married mothers and the earnings of husbands who are sole providers. And the weak correlation is positive, not negative: the entrance of mothers into the labor force has increased at the same time that real earnings of their husbands have gone up.

Nor is there a systematic relationship between the unemployment rates of married men and changes in the labor force participation rate of married women. If economic hardship is forcing massive numbers of women into the labor force, then higher unemployment of married men ought to be related to greater increases in labor force participation of married women. But no such relationship exists for the period, 1950-85.

This evidence denies the popular view that "economic necessity" is responsible for the striking surge in women's participation in the labor force. Women generally have not been forced into the work force; they have made a choice to enter it. But the political types pretend that women workers are helpless inductees. They hawk the hype because they seek popular support for a multi-billion dollar government child-care entitlement to buy the votes of middle-income parents. That support is more likely if women's participation in the labor force is seen as the result of grim necessity, not of felicitous choice.

Yo, George!

he enacted the same program.

Well, we've moved far beyond that. President Reagan and I now support the contras, and they've killed over 20 thousand people. Governor Dukakis wants to abandon them. Now you tell me, who's the real wimp here? Twenty thousand to one.

Next, the economy:

My friends, who is better qualified to carry on the Reagan economic record? Let's not forget, it was our Administration that gave America the worst depression since the Thirties, the highest poverty rates since the Fifties, and the highest deficits ever.

Well, a George Bush presidency will continue all of these policies. Interest and unemployment rates are already on their way back up to the levels of 1981 and '82. I won't raise your taxes — I'll give them away to the oil companies in tax credits. And I'll give the richest five percent of Americans the relief they need, by cutting their capital gains taxes in half and slashing their estate taxes.

Finally, let's go out by wrapping ourselves in the flag:

My opponent vetoed a bill that would have forced students to recite the Pledge of Allegiance every morning — just because the Massachusetts Supreme Court told him to!

My friends, I had a deprived childhood. We weren't allowed to say the Pledge of Allegiance at the Greenwich Country Day School. But I want to be an education president. With George Bush as President, every student in America will start each day by saluting the flag. And they'll wear tunics or gray flannel slacks with cute little blazers and school ties.

Well, George, I'm ready when you need me. You can reach me here, in care of the Daily Bruin.

In all likelihood, there have been times in your life when you've read something that just about drove you crazy. Maybe it was something someone gave you on Bruin Walk. Or maybe it was part of the assigned reading for a class. In fact, it might've even been an article in the Bruin.

As long as there's Bruin viewpoint, though, you have a potential recourse (even if it was an article in our section that annoyed you in the first place).

Our pages are largely filled with letters, viewpoints and counterpoints from students much like yourself, who — remembering to include their name, year, major and phone number — turned their submissions into the box on the receptionists' desk in 112 Kerckhoff Hall.

Nothing could have prepared me for the first few moments with my roommate. "Anique"—nothing more, just "Anique"—was her name. Change the "A" to a "U" and you've got a description.

When they asked what type of roommate I wanted, I didn't know that I needed to be more specific than non-smoker. I could swear I saw a picture of Anique on a postcard I got from London. Within five minutes, I found out that she was an Art History student, into the Psychedelic Furs, and totally, totally against the domestication of animals.

I was just about ready to put in for a room transfer when she reached into her leather backpack, pulled out a can of Suisse Mocha and offered me a cup. Okay, I decided I'd keep an open mind.

As we sipped our cups, I found out that Anique and I share the same fondness for Cary Grant movies, the same disdain for wine coolers, and the same ex-boyfriend. That gave us plenty to talk about.

Insurance

with the most votes, it nullifies all other initiatives that pass, and the measure can only be changed by a two-thirds majority in both houses of the Legislature. Prop. 104 locks us into a system full of loopholes for the insurance industry.

Proposition 100, however, allows for rate regulation. The Insurance Consumer Action Network's "good driver" initiative immediately cuts auto insurance rates 20 percent. Thereafter, "good drivers" continue to enjoy a 20 percent discount, since insurance companies must use driving records as the number one factor in setting rates for individuals. Future rate increases in auto insurance — as well as property, liability, homeowner, health, and municipal insurance — must be approved by an insurance consumer advocate officer, who would head a new Department of Consumer Advocate.

The "good driver," California Trial Lawyer Assn.-backed measure eliminates the insurance industry's anti-trust exemption. And Prop. 100 creates an information system for consumers to compare auto insurance rates, forces insurance companies to open their books for public scrutiny, and abolishes the territorial rating system. Premiums determined by the driving record of a policy holder's neighborhood are based on a territorial rating system. Prop. 100 also works against fraudulent claims, pressing the insurance industry to pay a small fee from every policy towards insurance fraud investigations and prosecutions.

At the outset, Prop. 100 looks like the answer to the problem, but the measure is rattled with holes. Prop. 100 would virtually prohibit any type of no-fault insurance in the future. It completely forbids any regulation of attorney's fees. Insurance companies and taxpayers would still have to pay for wasteful litigation. Again, unless a two-thirds majority can be obtained in the Legislature, we would be locked into Prop. 100. Further, insurance companies can escape the initial 20 percent across-the-board rate cut if insurers can prove their earnings would be "inadequate." The industry can continue territorial ratings, too, if they can prove economic instability.

Both Prop. 100 and 104 fail to completely address California's auto insurance crisis. Loopholes plague the narrow-minded initiatives, which clearly reflect the greedy self-interests of the lawyers and insurance companies. California needs a no-fault type of system that will quickly provide accident victims with injury and property claims, and a system that will cut out unnecessary lawsuits. The state must regulate insurance rates, for if the state mandates that every one of us have law insurance, the price must be kept down to reasonable, affordable levels. New York holds down insurance increases to four percent annually with a no fault and rate regulatory system. Unfortunately, no initiative on the ballot offers both protections. Please don't settle for less, and avoid Prop. 100 and 104. ■ and-a-half hour meeting. However, Lee stated her opinion as to why the student publications should be forced to print on a set date or be financially penalized.

She based her reasons on her knowledge as a Bruin staff member, disregarding the facts exposed to her by the staffs and editors regarding the great differences between the Daily Bruin and the other student publications, which are continuously recovering from systematic cutbacks.

O'Connor stated moments before the vote, "What if I disagree?" to which a member of the audience responded, "Then you will confirm all of our suspicions," expressing the common feeling among editors that O'Connor and Lee are generally in opposition to student publications other than the Daily Bruin.

Overall, the Comm Board's decision was a positive step. Nevertheless, the overhead for plant and maintenance must still be paid with student publications' money.

Volunteer students should not be forced to render money that they raise for their publications. Volunteer students should not pay for providing a service to their community.

Furthermore, if ASUCLA, through the Comm Board, wants students to make money, they must invest in these publications, such as by purchasing desk-top systems in each publications' office for easier accessibility.

This is only one of many needs.

Likewise if ASUCLA wants students in the media to make money, like any other ASUCLA employee does, then it should pay them a salary, just like it pays the guy who sells sandwiches in the Treehouse or the man who sells books in the Student Store.

Power of the word

NOMMO, the oldest publication after the Daily Bruin, has experienced a number of changes.

Originally, NOMMO was funded by the University and published 12 times a year, without the burden of soliciting advertisements in a neighborhood that does not cater to the needs of the Black community.

Created during a period of social unrest and mobilization, NOMMO, gave Blacks/Africans a legitimate voice in its first issue, published by UCLA's nascent Black Student Union on December 4, 1968.

Since then, NOMMO has become the vehicle for Black consciousness on the UCLA campus, symbolizing, as well as enhancing, the level of political development that Black people had reached.

It seemed like Black people would finally be paid for the disservice done to them by the dominant white establishment.

In its own development, NOMMO has become the embodiment of the Swahili term — "the magic transformative power of the word."

Yet gradually a process of structural reorganization took place at UCLA, until NOMMO was put under the jurisdiction of the ASUCLA Comm Board. Now, on the year of its 20th anniversary, NOMMO is faced with the economic burden of paying for intangible services known as overhead.

What a way for UCLA to greet NOMMO on its 20th anniversary.

The question now is whether the UCLA administration and ASUCLA will at least fund NOMMO's 20th anniversary celebration and, in so doing, commend its twenty years of community service at UCLA, as well as its contribution to the maintenance of cultural diversity and awareness.

According to Julie Fuller, editor-in-chief of NOMMO, "A positive response from the University in action, not in empty words, would be acknowledgment enough for all the generations of NOMMO staffs since 1968, who have endeavored to keep Black people abreast of what's going on in this world."

The same is true for all the other publications which the reader should look for this year: La Gente de Aztlan, the Chicano student bilingual newspaper; Pacific Ties, the Asian Pacific student newsmagazine; Ha'Am, the Jewish student newsmagazine; Together, the women's issue newsmagazine; and Ten Percent, the newsmagazine for the Gay/Lesbian community, which is commemorating its 10th anniversary.

They all should publish at least twice a quarter and are located on top of every kiosk where the Daily Bruin is placed. Reach for one, and no matter whether you agree or disagree with the content, read it. I challenge you. ■

Manjarrez, a senior majoring in social psychology, is the editor-in-chief of La Gente.

ATTENTION WESTSIDE READERS: Not everyone knows this, but you don't have to be a UCLA student to submit letters, viewpoints, counterpoints and cartoons to the Daily Bruin. All you have to do is include some piece of information that we can tack on to the end of your article — such as the city you live in — and we can consider it along with our other submissions. As always, legibility is also important. And please include a phone number. We won't print it, but we would like to be able to reach you if we have any questions.

No use coming to help me now
I've learned my lesson, anyhow!
Believe me, once I get unpasted
From all this paper I have wasted,
I'll try no other crazy caper,
I'll read the Want Ads in the paper,
And, if I fail to find help there,
That's still no reason to despair —
Mom says you've never really tried
Until you've run a Classified!

Former UCLA employee to be arraigned on 2 counts of burglary

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

A former UCLA Medical Center employee who allegedly stole computer hardware from the university's Brain Research Institute this month will face arraignment in county superior court Oct. 13 on two burglary charges.

In a preliminary hearing Thursday at the Los Angeles County Municipal Court in West Los Angeles, David Lee Duncan, 28, of Culver City received a felony charge of commercial burglary, and was also charged with receiving stolen property.

The charges stem from a Sept. 9 burglary, in which a Macintosh computer system was stolen from a BRI laboratory. The computer system was later recovered by campus police.

At his arraignment, Duncan will enter a plea against the two charges, which are violations of penal codes 459 and 496, respectively.

According to Deputy District Attorney Diane Tasoff, the prosecution is expected to give Duncan an as-yet undecided plea bargain offer, in exchange for a reduced sentence should he plead guilty.

Arraignment proceedings will take place Oct. 13 at the Los Angeles County Superior Court, department B, in Santa Monica.

Blast off!

The space shuttle Discovery took off from Kennedy Space Center yesterday morning without a hitch.

Shuttle launch has U.S. back in space

Liftoff successful after 2-year grounding of shuttle program

By Harry F. Rosenthal
Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Space shuttle Discovery carried the American flag back into space Thursday after a 32-month absence, its five astronauts riding a 700-foot tail of flame from rockets meticulously redesigned after the Challenger disaster.

"Everyone certainly stood tall today," said Kennedy Space Center director Forrest S. McCartney as Discovery settled into orbit, 184 miles above earth. Mission Control said the ship was "performing nominally."

Six hours after liftoff the crew accomplished the main mission of its flight, release of a satellite that will give NASA nearly constant communication with future shuttle missions.

It was the first launch since the Challenger explosion with its toll of seven lives on a cold winter day shocked the nation and stopped the manned space program in its tracks.

"We sure appreciate your all getting us up in orbit the way we should be," Discovery's commander, Navy Capt. Frederick Hauck, told Mission Control. "We're looking forward to the next four days — we have a lot to do and we're going to have a lot of fun doing it."

Liftoff was the first and most important milestone, but more was at stake than simply getting into space. The 2½-year grounding of the shuttle fleet set back the nation's satellite delivery capability, and release of a communications satellite was the main order of business in orbit, several hours after launch.

The giant Tracking and Data Relay Satellite is a $100-million twin of the craft that was destroyed aboard Challenger.

In Washington, President Reagan praised the launch, saying the shuttle was "headed into orbit and America is back in space." He saluted the bravery of the crew and added, "We ask God to bless this important voyage."

Launch, at 11:37 a.m. EDT, came only after NASA waived weather guidelines to allow for flight through some lighter-than-usual Florida winds. The 98-minute delay simply heightened the tension as NASA unveiled a spaceship that underwent more than 400 modifications since the Challenger flight.

Just how well the Discovery's booster rockets performed in their new design awaited detailed analysis. But J.R. Thompson, who directed the work from the Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama

UCLA sophomore Steve Lewis

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

When Steve Lewis first walked on campus last year, he was a champion.

OK, a California state track and field high school champion, two times over, to be exact.

Next Monday, Lewis, just a sophomore, will once again grace the campus as a champion — this time of somewhat greater proportions.

As an Olympic Gold Medalist.

And he's just 19 years old.

Yes, on Wednesday afternoon in Seoul, South Korea at the 1988 Summer Games, Lewis shocked the world by edging his way to a thrilling win in the 400 meter race.

He finished the race in 43.87 seconds, thus beating his own Junior world record for the fifth time and coming within one-one hundredth of a second of tying the 20-year-old Olympic record held by American Lee Evans — a record, incidentally, that is older than Lewis himself.

In the process, Lewis beat out the current

UC schools to raise number of minorities

By Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

Hoping to "help the university respond to a changing California and a changing world" by reflecting the diverse population of the state, UC President David Gardner has obligated all UC chancellors to submit plans by Jan. 1 for increasing the number of women and minorities in graduate schools and on the University faculties.

Though Gardner, in a letter to the nine chancellors, acknowledged the impressive strides taken by the universities to improve minority enrollment and relations, he claimed that UC has "not done so evenly across all areas or campuses. Our progress and lack of progress have been widely discussed."

The president has asked for each of the chancellors to inform him of their efforts to improve the quality of education for minorities and women on their respective campuses by the January deadline.

At press time, Chancellor Charles Young could not be reached to comment on how UCLA would respond to Gardner's plan.

"It is critical that you continue . . . nurturing

Clarification

In the Bruin's registration issue, a story on an animal rights protest that occurred at the Westwood Benetton store inadvertently said the protest was held Aug. 17. The protest actually occurred Sept. 17.

In the same issue, it was incorrectly reported that the Education Abroad Program (EAP) is open only to honors students. EAP requires that the student have a grade point average of at least 3.0 and be a junior by the time they leave the country. Students must also meet foreign language requirements for certain programs.

Offices allocated to groups forced out of Kerckhoff

By Richard Hopkins
Staff Writer

Two organizations which recently lost their office space in Kerckhoff Hall have been given a new home.

The groundwork has nearly been completed for the UCLA Community Resource Center, which will provide office space for Raza Women and Chicanos for Community Medicine (CCM) as well as eight other community service-related organizations.

On Aug. 16, the Undergraduate Students Association Council voted to take away Kerckhoff office space from Raza Women and CCM.

The Community Service Planning Committee was formed after Winston Doby, vice chancellor of student affairs, sent a letter on Aug. 26 to seven student leaders and seven administrators, asking them to serve on the committee.

According to a report released by the committee, the center will improve the effectiveness of existing community service programs, with administrative support.

Three factors that "underlie the development of a community service center" are service, educational benefits derived from community service participation and improving working relations among diverse groups.

According to Doby, one reason the opening of the center has been delayed is that existing staff need to be transferred to work in the center.

"We are having consultations with individuals who have demonstrated an interest in wanting to participate in enhancing community services opportunities for students," said Doby.

"We don't have separate resources to put together a new center . . . there's not a pot of money that's waiting to be allocated," said Doby.

The report requests $154,168 for the program; however, the center's budget is still pending approval by the registration fee committee.

Allen Yarnell, vice chancellor of student relations, said that the center's committee had hoped to open the office yesterday, but staff members have not been hired. He could not offer an approximate date for the center's opening, saying that it will be in operation "as soon as possible."

Other groups the center hopes to serve include student services and community agencies who want UCLA students to serve as volunteers in their organizations; any affiliated student organization involved in community service; and any UCLA student interested in getting involved in community service activities.

The appointment process for the other eight groups has not yet been established, Yarnell said.

Among committee members are Yarnell, Undergraduate Students Association President Michael Meehan, USAC General Representative Mike Spence, USAC Facilities Commissioner Jason Weiss and USAC Community Service Commissioner John Sarvey.

Carol Channing of the Broadway musical "Hello Dolly" and stand-up comedienne Lotus Weinstock are among tonight's guests for the new extension class "Hollywood Women." Tonight's lecture, the first of the eight-class series, is devoted to women in comedy.

The lecture starts at 7 p.m. in 100 Moore Hall and is free, tonight only, to all full-time UCLA students with ID. The entire lecture series costs $125. Channing and Weinstock will be joined by actress Melanie Chartoff; "Slap Maxwell" regular Megan Gallagher; Martha Coolidge, director of "Valley Girl"; and Universal Studio's Vice-President of comedy Barbara Roman. The instructor for the course will be Paul Ryan.

Ryan, a television talk show host, has interviewed over 500 celebrities for "The Paul Ryan Show," now in its 10th year on the air. "I have always found women wonderful to interview because they are more open with their feelings and more vulnerable," Ryan said.

"Earlier this year I hosted a one-hour NBC special entitled 'Hollywood Women' and I fell in love with the subject matter," he said.

Carol Channing

"Since then I have come up with a book proposal on the topic and I have put together this live event series through UCLA extension." Ryan added that the series covers a cross-section of women in the entertainment industry, in the limelight and behind the scenes.

"Tonight is also a good chance for people to get an insight of how to break into the business," Ryan said. "Plus it's Friday night and if you don't have a date this is a good way to meet one. What a better way to help one's career as well as one's social life?"

DUNCAN: Once worked at Medical Center

County municipal judge Sherman W. Smith, Jr. also placed Duncan into the custody of the Los Angeles Sheriff's Department on $2,500 bail.

Two-hour testimony

During Thursday's hearing, which included two hours of testimony from a BRI researcher and campus police and security officers, Duncan remained sedate as he sat handcuffed to his chair. Only seldom did he consult his public defender, Cathy Pattinson.

Duncan was once an employee of the UCLA Medical Center's Campus Crafts and Alterations from Oct. 1980 through Sept. 1987, according to UCLA personnel verification services.

Dr. Faye Eggerding testified to the court that as she left her laboratory on Friday, Sept. 9, she "specifically remembered" locking the door behind her at the Brain Research Institute. Eggerding said that no one else is allowed in the laboratory where she conducts brain-related research.

At the time, Eggerding's lab was equipped with a MacIntosh computer system, which she used to assist her in research. Tasoff estimated the equipment's value to be approximately $3,000.

The next day, Eggerding returned to her office and discovered her MacIntosh system — a computer with monitor, keyboard, printer, external drive, and locating mouse — was gone. She filed a report with the UC Police Department that afternoon.

According to UCPD crime reports, Duncan was arrested in the early hours of Sept. 11, as a possible suspect in the Sept. 9 computer burglary and for resisting arrest.

UCPD Sgt. Al Brown said that at about 11:15 p.m. on Sept. 10, community service officer Matthew Ramano observed Duncan "acting suspiciously" at the

Policeman rehired after brutality charge

The Associated Press

TORRANCE — A police officer accused of brutality in a federal lawsuit was ordered to be rehired by the City Council seven years ago, despite the police chief's warning that the officer tended to be overly aggressive.

Torrance Officer James Lynch, 35, and his partner, Ross Bartlett, 34, were named in a civil rights lawsuit filed last week that accused them of using excessive force in the arrests of seven men at a May 15 party.

A videotape released by the men allegedly shows Lynch choking Thomas Tice, 20, while Bartlett hit him repeatedly with a night stick.

An attorney for the men, Hugh Manes, said the city of Torrance was negligent when the council voted May 12, 1981 to return Lynch to duty nine months after Chief Donald Nash fired him for "a behavior pattern on the job which results in continuing incidents and the probability of future incidents of misconduct."

'I think an investigation of the entire incident will vindicate the actions of both officers.'

— Attorney Richard Shinee

Nash recommended that Lynch be kept off the force because of "a propensity toward over-aggressive behavior."

In the May incident, police and council members asked that the public not judge it on the videotape alone. The tape does not show that the two officers were repeatedly threatened and surrounded by as many as 35 men at the party, said Lt. Robert Armstrong, head of the department's personnel division.

"I think an investigation of the entire incident will vindicate the actions of both officers," said their attorney, Richard Shinee.

Defense bill likely to be OK'd

Measure gives Pentagon $300 billion

By Tim Ahern
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan has assured congressional leaders he will sign the latest version of a Pentagon budget bill which is similar in most respects to a measure he vetoed last month.

"This bill will be signed," Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, told his colleagues late Wednesday.

The assurances of Reagan's approval were conveyed by Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci during a week of closed-door talks with Nunn and other legislators, Nunn said.

"The president will approve this bill. That was made very clear and definite," said Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee.

The House voted 369-48 approval of the revised measure Wednesday afternoon. Three hours later, the Senate passed it, 91-4.

Overall, the measure authorizes the Pentagon to spend $300 billion in the fiscal year beginning Saturday, the same total as was contained in the bill Reagan vetoed Aug. 3. That represents a slight cut from this year's $301 billion defense budget.

Brazilian airliner hijacked; two killed

The Associated Press

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — A Brazilian jetliner with more than 98 people aboard was hijacked Thursday by a man who killed the co-pilot and at least one passenger, officials said.

Mona Cury, a spokeswoman for the Viacao Aerea Sao Paulo (VASP) airline, said Flight 375 was on its daily run from the Amazon jungle city of Porto Velho to Rio de Janeiro on the southeast Atlantic coast when it was hijacked.

Federal Police Chief Romeu Tuma said in Brasilia, the capital, that the hijacker was a man who apparently was mentally disturbed.

Col. Eden Asvolinsque, an air force spokesman, said in Brasilia that the hijacker "invaded the cockpit and forced the crew to surrender."

He said the plane was ordered flown to Brasilia, 750 miles northwest of Rio. However, bad weather forced the pilot to land in Goiania, a city 150 miles from Brasilia.

Avolinsque said an Air Force jet intercepted the hijacked plane and accompanied it to Goiania. State and federal police surrounded the plane, and an Air Force official was negotiating with the hijacker, he said.

During the hijacking, the co-pilot and a passenger were killed, possibly by gunfire, the airport authority at Rio's Galeao International Airport said.

After nearly running out of fuel, the jet landed in Goiania, 150 miles northwest of Brasilia, said Morton Luiz, a spokesman for Goiania's state police.

"He told the control tower he was against the economic policies of President Jose Sarney and insisted on going to Brasilia. He didn't make any other demands," Luiz said by telephone from Goiania.

Officials said the plane was carrying 98 passengers and an unknown number of crew members.

Conference planned to discuss media's minority coverage

By Thanh Nhan
Contributor

The media's treatment of minority issues and concerns will be the topic of a media conference scheduled for Nov. 3, from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Ackerman Union's second floor lounge.

According to Frances Fernandes, ASUCLA media advisor, the conference was prompted in part by controversy in the past over student media coverage of minority issues.

Cited as an example of media insensitivity were the Daily Bruin captions which appeared last spring quarter. The captions referred to the predominantly black audience attending rap group Public Enemy No. 1's concert as a "mob" and as an "enthusiastic but docile crowd."

Student journalists from schools throughout Southern California and professionals from both broadcast and print journalism will explore the trends in media and ways to improve the coverage of minority issues.

Tony Cox, a former Daily Bruin reporter and former president of the Black Journalists Association, is expected to participate in the conference. Cox is also a veteran of radio and television broadcasting.

"We all have a certain view of different people that does not necessarily exclude them but hasn't yet learned how to include them," said Fernandes.

The media is dominated by white men, Fernandes said, and the media need to explore and take on different perspectives.

The conference's planners, which include Fernandes, Assistant Media Advisor Arvli Ward and representatives from the special interest papers on campus, hope that the conference will expand awareness and make students examine sensitive issues from different perspectives.

Those interested in the conference may call 825-2787 for more information.

Crowds, crafts abound at Westwood art show

By Deborah Lopez

Brazilian jazz, rhythm and blues plus the work of more than 400 artists and craftspersons, are some of the attractions scheduled for this weekend, Oct. 1 and 2, at the 38th Semi-Annual Arts and Crafts Show in Westwood.

Sponsored by the Los Angeles Business Council, the show includes the display and sale of some 12 categories of arts and crafts. Oil paintings, drawings, sculptures and collages are some of the categories; each of which will be judged separately. Three top prizes will be given for the best exhibition in each one.

According to Sue Asparturian of the business council, several live bands will perform on an outdoor stage at the corner of Westwood Blvd. and Broxton. Gravity, a rhythm and blues band, will appear, and the sounds of the Brazilian group Volupia will provide a Latin flavor to the event.

This year, the show for the first time will feature a Kiddie Carnival. Located on South Weyburn, the carnival will feature children's rides, games and prizes. Clowns, puppets and mimes will also perform on a children's outdoor stage, for the enjoyment of young and old alike, Asparturian said.

The Arts and Crafts Show will take place along Westwood Blvd. between Broxton and Weyburn from 9 a.m. and 6 p.m. this Saturday and Sunday.

Free parking is available behind the Federal Building, and shuttles running to and from the show cost 25 cents.

French Revolution commemorated

UCLA departments plan lectures, courses, events

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of articles about a year-long UCLA program celebrating the French Bicentennial. The second story will address scholars' debate over the interpretation of the revolution.

1789 - 1989

By Marlene Casillas
Contributor

The 200th anniversary of the storming of the Bastille, which gave birth to the French Revolution, will be commemorated on July 14, 1989. Yet, the biggest celebration planned to date is not in France.

"1789-1989, The French Revolution: A UCLA Bicentennial Program" is a year-long academic celebration — the biggest in the world — encompassing a wide-range of disciplines, said Robert Maniquis, director of the program.

The French Revolution impacted the Western world in politics, science, medicine, literature and the arts, Maniquis said.

UCLA contains a wealth of talented people who can contribute to building a multidisciplinary program, an appropriate way to recognize the anniversary, Maniquis said.

"This program allows different departments to work together, which is a unique opportunity," he said.

Beginning this quarter through the fall of 1989, more than 50 UCLA faculty members are planning extensive courses, lectures, exhibitions and cultural events, which all relate to the revolution. Although France's birthday party is centered at UCLA, the guests include scholars and artists from all over the world.

Legendary mime-artist Marcel Marceau and internationally acclaimed flutist Jean-Pierre Rampal will headline performances and concerts of "The French Festival Series." Ramunas Kondratas of the Smithsonian Institution will lecture on public health in Paris during the "Medicine in the Era of the French Revolution" lecture series.

In addition, the program extends beyond campus boundaries, Maniquis said. Exhibits and film festivals will tour the nation, visiting several cities and universities.

"The late 1700s were an electric period in history," Maniquis said, "and the French Revolution was a political earthquake."

The revolution was a significant event in world history because it went in directions that earlier revolutions, including the American Revolution, did not, he added.

"This is not to say that the American Revolution was not significant and influential," Maniquis clarified. But France's revolution occurred in a different political, social and economic context. The French Revolution sparked ideologies that shattered existing conceptions and remain in our political and social consciousness today, he added.

For example, the French revolutionists declared the principle of the rights of man and citizen universal, said Maniquis. Thus, the notion was born that all men had rights to freedom from political tyranny, disease and the cruelties of the natural world, he explained.

Revolutionary principles undermined assumptions on which several governments throughout the world were based. Jews were given full citizenship in France, which upset neighboring countries, he said.

However, some ideals led to contradictory action. Olynpe de Gouges, a French Revolutionist who published literature on the rights of women, was guillotined.

The revolution sparked controversy that exists even today, Maniquis said.

Scholars continue to debate interpretations of the complex events that took place, and the UCLA program will incorporate many opposing viewpoints, he said.

"Our goal is to help students gain a keen insight into a critical point in modern history," Maniquis said.

USAC establishes new fiscal policy task force

Ending its last "summer meeting" after only one hour, the Undergraduate Students Association Council passed one motion — to establish a fiscal policy task force, which would examine expenditures such as council retreats.

The following are other highlights of the Sept. 28 meeting:

■ Finance Committee Chair Marcos Arvizu discussed the council's new telephone access codes, which he said will help to prevent high telephone costs.

■ Second Vice President Mike Braun requested the council's input on devising a new definition of a special interest group. Last year's council repeatedly raised the issue of redefining the SIGs, but no concrete decision was made.

■ Financial Supports Commissioner Mark Jessee and Cultural Affairs Commissioner Ken Wada did not attend the meeting. Wada arrived minutes after the meeting ended.

■ The council announced that the Black Student Alliance will be attending USAC's Oct. 4 meeting to discuss its ideas on the SIG definition.

Ombudsman deals in campus disputes

By W. Kevin Leung
City Editor

'If someone is hurting, it is our responsibility to address it . . . Conflict is not bad. Violence is.'

— Ombudsman Donald Hartsock

The painting that covers an entire wall of Ombudsman Donald Hartsock's office is misleading.

It depicts an unidentified Pacific island beach. But the ombudsman's office is not a place where the UCLA community can escape its problems. In fact, Hartsock wants people to confront them there.

Hartsock's responsibility as the ombudsman is to listen to grievances from UCLA students, staff and administrators.

The types of problems Hartsock has heard include enrollment, grading disputes, sexual harassment and personal conflicts between UCLA members, the ombudsman said.

Hartsock stressed that no problem is too small, and that his office is willing to deal with any kind of grievance.

"If someone is hurting, it is our responsibility to address it," Hartsock said on behalf of his small staff operating from Kinsey 274.

Talking with the other person involved in the conflict is the first step someone should take when faced with a problem, Hartsock advised.

If the confrontation is uncomfortable, the ombudsman's office can provide tips on approaching the other party, Hartsock said. But a person should feel comfortable to come to his office at any stage of a conflict, he said.

Though Hartsock is not a substitute for formal grievance procedures, he said his role is to try to resolve problems before they require formal procedures.

The ombudsman will explain options and the process involved in a grievance, and tell people what to anticipate.

He said that he always tries to get the parties involved to sit down and talk out the problem before it gets "emotional."

"Conflict is not bad," Hartsock said. "Violence is."

Even without any official power, he said his office has a 70 percent success rate in resolving from eight to 10 problems each day.

If anyone is unsatisfied after seeking help from the ombudsman, the person can always go through official channels, Hartsock said.

Although he was appointed by Chancellor Charles Young, Hartsock said the chancellor has no authority over him.

"I feel I am responsible for the person who comes through the door," Hartsock said.

Regents to request 10 percent more for 1989-1990 budget

Increase needed to 'stay even'

By Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

Despite the need for increased funding and improvements at many UC campuses, the Board of Regents will not seek state funding increases above what is deemed necessary to preserve purchasing power and provide for anticipated enrollment increases.

William B. Baker, vice president for budget and university relations, told the Regents that the UC system will request a 10 percent funding increase in 1989-90, "just to stay even."

According to Rick Malaspina, spokesman for the regents, this would be an increase from last year's approximate $2.04 billion request to an almost $2.2 billion which will be asked for this year.

The University's current budget allocated from the state is $1.986 billion.

"Realistically, though, it is even questionable if we can achieve the (additional) 10 percent," Baker said at the Sept. 16 meeting, as stated in a press release.

Malaspina explained that last year the state took in $1 billion aess than it recorded, which was a "mistake in the books." And in addition, Gov. George Deukmejian intends to rebuild the state's budget reserve to about $1.1 billion and plans to provide $200 million to counties for trial courts. Malaspina believes these expenditures will contribute to the state's pending budgetary problems.

Though augmentations are required in areas including instructional improvements, building maintenance, libraries, affirmative action and new research initiatives, the objective of the budget is "maintaining the university's resource base adjusted to accommodate inflation, fixed costs, enrollment growth and salaries," Baker said, speaking on behalf of UC President David Gardner on Sept. 16 at UC San Francisco.

The 10 percent increase would accommodate a total of 3,000 additional students expected to enroll at the nine UC campuses combined.

Because of the state's expected budgetary problems, the board decided to forego additional funding requests, Baker explained.

Should the university fail to receive an adequate allocation of state funds, the system would be forced to decide between enrolling more students while eroding its base budget, or maintaining the budget and not enrolling more students.

A similar dilemma arose in July, after the 1988-1989 state Budget Act cut $64.4 million from the University's budget. UC President Gardner warned that without proper funding, enrollment would revert to the 1987-88 level. This was avoided when the Legislature restored $30.9 million to the budget, bringing the 1988-89 state budget to its current $1.986 billion — 4.7 percent higher than last year's.

> The objective of the budget is 'maintaining the university's resource base adjusted to accommodate inflation, fixed costs, enrollment growth and salaries.'
> — William B. Baker

Baker added that university officials "do intend to look . . . at existing funds to determine whether we can reallocate in order to keep our momentum going."

The budget will be discussed in greater detail at the Regents' October 20 meeting in San Francisco.

Baker looked ahead to the coming election, claiming Proposition 98 could have "serious negative budgetary effects" on the University.

The so-called Classroom Instructional Improvement and Accountability Act would guarantee funding increases for public schools and community colleges, even during years when funding is limited.

According to Baker, Proposition 98 would make changes in the Gann limit, the constitutional amendment which restricts growth in state and local spending according to a formula based on inflation and population growth.

It would guarantee adjustments for inflation and workload and allow for real growth through allocations of the Gann limit surpluses "for K-12 and the community colleges — and only for them," Baker said. "The University has no such protection."

The university will need an average increase of about 8.5 percent in the next decade to remain even. Only a 7 percent growth in state appropriation is anticipated through 1997-98, however.

Prop. 78, which would provide funds for the University's capital — construction — budget will also appear on the ballot. The measure would answer a $210 million budget request with bond revenues, distributed to the UC system, the California State University system and California Community Colleges. The UC system would receive approximately $124 million, Malaspina said, the bulk of money needed.

"It's very important that the measure be approved," he maintained.

LETTERS POLICY: For letters, viewpoints or counterpoints to be considered for publication in the UCLA Daily Bruin, they must be typed or handwritten legibly. They should also include the student's full name, major, year, home/work phone number, and registration number. Phone numbers are for reference only and will not be printed.

Regents honor UCLA Nobel laureate at September meeting

By Shana Chandler
Staff Writer

The UC Board of Regents approved several appointments and one resignation at its September meeting in San Francisco. Robert N. Noyce resigned from the board after serving since 1982. He was appointed by Governor Edmund Brown Jr. and acted as vice-chairman of the Committee on Oversight of the Department of Energy Laboratories and as a member of the Committee on Educational Policy and the Committee on Investments.

Among the appointees:

■ Donald J. Cram, 1987 Nobel Prize winner in Chemistry, was appointed to the position of University Professor, an honor given to only 13 UC faculty in the entire UC system. Cram's post will be for the Department of Chemistry and Biochemistry at UCLA.

■ Toby Winer, former associate vice-chancellor for finance at Vanderbilt University, was appointed to the newly created position of assistant vice president for administration in UC's Division of Agriculture and Natural Resources. She will oversee the Division's $200 million annual budget, manage contracts and grants, accounting, information systems, personnel services and affirmative action.

Winer will also have administrative responsibility for nine agricultural field stations and other off-campus facilities.

REGENTS: Minorities

a greater appreciation of and a healthier regard for the growing diversity of our campus communities," Gardner wrote in his letter to the chancellors.

"This is the most definitive and strongest statement about women and minority enrollment" Gardner has made, according to Rick Malaspina, a spokesman in the UC Regents' Berkeley office.

"$18 million is spent a year on Affirmative Action," Malaspina said. "This letter says 'don't let it slow down.' "

The chancellors have also been asked to respond to several reports already given by the Chicano Latino Consortium in June 1988 and the UC Conference on Future Black Faculty Hiring.

"These meetings," Malaspina said, "called for more attention and more action regarding minority situations. This letter is a response to that."

At UCLA, 10.9 percent of the graduate students are under-represented minorities, according to Ellen Benkin, director of Graduate Institutional Research. "Nationwide we're very good," she said. "We have a higher minority representation than most.

"What I would hope is that the campuses don't simply ask for more money" in January, she said. "What we need to do is encourage people to stay" and finish their education.

According to Raymund Parades, an associate dean of English in the graduate division and the chairman of Chancellor Charles Young's Council on Diversity, "UCLA is far ahead. We're even ahead of the (UC) president. We have given high priority to Gardner's concerns, e.g. the Council on Diversity. I believe the other campuses have not been quite as committed. Gardner's leadership will play an important part in that.

"This doesn't mean a lowering of (academic) standards," Parades insisted. "This is an opportunity to make UCLA a better, richer university. If we develop the resources of Afro-Americans, women, disabled students, Latinos, etc., we'll have a richer academic experience for all of our students."

> 'It is critical that you continue . . . nurturing a greater appreciation of and a healthier regard for the growing diversity of our campus communities,"
> —President Gardner

Gardner stated in his letter that he would increase funding for campus-based student affirmative action programs "even if to do so requires a reallocation of funds within UC."

Malaspina indicated that Gardner would determine where money would be drawn from to fund any new affirmative action programs.

Professor Ed Soja, associate dean of the Graduate School of Architecture and Urban Planning, whose school came under fire last year for alleged unfair treatment of its minority and female students said, "We need the voice of students to help us."

As part of statewide efforts to improve the quality of education throughout the UC system, the California State Senate has formed a special committee to study the topic of UC admissions. Chaired by Senator Art Torres, the committee will hold a hearing at UCLA to examine incidents of alleged racism on the UC campuses, primarily at UCLA, Berkeley and Santa Barbara.

The hearing is scheduled for 10 a.m. on Tuesday, Oct. 4, in the West Center.

Photos of Soviet shuttle disclosed

By Andrew Katell
Associated Press

Despite repeated comments by Soviet officials that their shuttle has a distinct design and capabilities, the Tass photographs indicated it was quite similar to the American version.

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union released the first photos of its secret space shuttle Thursday in a move that ap ared timed to steal some o. the thunder from the launch of Discovery.

Photos of the Soviet craft, which looks just like the American shuttle, moved on the wires of the official Tass news agency at about the time the Discovery was scheduled to blast off from Cape Canaveral.

Along with the photos of the Soviet craft, the agency transmitted a brief dispatch on the American launch.

The Soviet shuttle previously was not shown to the Soviet or foreign public, although some Western reconnaissance photographs of the craft or mockup versions have been taken.

The Tass photos showed the Soviet spacecraft against a twilight sky, with its black-tipped white wings and fuselage. On one wing, the letters ''CCCP'' — Russian for U.S.S.R. — were written in red.

State-run Soviet television did not broadcast the Discovery launch live, but showed only a film clip of the American craft sitting on the launch pad in darkness. An announcer read a report on the blastoff during a regularly scheduled newscast a few minutes later.

The evening television news program Vremya, which is watched by millions of Soviets, showed still pictures of the Soviet shuttle as its third item and said that ground tests of its equipment were continuing. The program showed film of the Discovery launch about 20 minutes later.

Radio Moscow's international newscast also juxtaposed reports about the U.S. takeoff with updates on the Soviet space station Mir — meaning both Earth and Peace — with three cosmonauts aboard.

Despite repeated comments by Soviet officials that their shuttle has a distinct design and capabilities, the Tass photographs indicated it was quite similar to the American version. The Soviet shuttle, under development since at least 1982, has delta-shaped wings like its American counterpart, and is mated to its booster rocket, the Energia, in a similar way as the American craft.

Mir was pictured in front of the huge Energia booster, which can carry payloads of up to 100 tons — much more than the American shuttle.

In the photos, the booster and shuttle stood upright on tarmac, apparently at the Baikonur Cosmodrome in Soviet Central Asia, but it was not clear if it was stationed at a launch pad. Soviet officials have said their shuttle will be launched by the end of 1988, but have not given an exact date. They have acknowledged technical problems are causing delays. The Soviet shuttle's first flight is to be unmanned.

corner of Hilgard and Westholme avenues waiting to board a bus. In testimony Thursday, Ramano said that he witnessed Duncan deposit cardboard boxes into a dumpster, keeping a dark plastic trash bag in his hands. A power cord dangled from the bag.

Police later recovered the bag, which contained the missing MacIntosh computer components. The cardboard boxes, UCPD reported, were marked in black ink with the initials of the UCLA Neuropsychiatric Institute, or NPI.

During questioning, Eggerding, a member of the NPI staff, told Tasoff that the NPI offices are located in a hall next to her lab.

UCPD officer Carlos Franco responded to the CSO's dispatch and stopped the bus, which Duncan had since boarded, at LeConte and Tiverton avenues. Franco failed to apprehend Duncan as the suspect fled from the bus into a residential area south of the UCLA campus.

Officer Franco requested backup officers, and soon a search perimeter was set up with the assistance of additional UCPD officers and the Los Angeles Police Department, which sent a helicopter and officers with sniffing dogs.

Close to 1 a.m. Sunday, Sept. 11, officers located and arrested Duncan in the basement of the apartment complex at 910 Tiverton. Sgt. Brown said that Duncan resisted arrest, and as a result, was bitten by police dogs on both arms.

Duncan was taken to the Los Angeles County Medical Ward at USC for treatment of dog bites, according to police reports. He was booked there at 8:16 a.m.

According to Sgt. Brown, officer Franco recognized Duncan as ''a known and wanted suspect by this department.'' According to previous UCPD reports, an anonymous tipster informed UCPD that Duncan may have been involved in previous computer burglaries within the UCLA Medical Center.

UCPD detective Diane Huddleston, who is heading a follow-up investigation with two other detectives, was present at Thursday's hearing. She could not be reached for comment despite several attempts to reach her by telephone before and after the hearing.

Duncan has been in police custody at the Los Angeles County Jail since his arrest.

According to Sgt. Brown, 25-30 burglaries have been reported at the Medical Center in the last few months, but UCPD would not release statistics on how many of those burglaries involved computer hardware. However, several UCPD officers said that computer thefts have been a significant problem not only at the medical center, but on campus in general.

Another shuttle accident would force investigation

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — NASA officials, who have said since the Challenger disaster that spaceflight will never be risk-free, were asked on Wednesday what would happen if there were another catastrophe.

''I think the space program certainly will survive in any case,'' deputy administrator Dale D. Myers told reporters on the eve of Discovery's flight.

''We've done everything we know to make a safe flight out of this thing; we are certainly aware there is risk in programs of this nature. We think it's a low enough risk that we are recognizing it and accepting that risk.''

Myers said it is inevitable that spaceflight will continue.

''Americans want to explore,'' he said. ''I think the world wants to explore. A manned spaceflight program is the next frontier that man has always reached for. I don't think there would be a secession of manned space flight.''

But, Myers added, ''I think there would be one heck of another investigation before we got under way again.'' said, ''From everything I see, everything looks great.''

Hauck's veteran flight crew consisted of Air Force Col. Richard Covey, Marine Lt. Col. David C. Hilmers; John M. Lounge; and George D. ''Pinky'' Nelson. Landing was scheduled for Monday at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

The astronauts had said all along they were treating the mission as a test mission — a ''shakedown flight,'' in the words of Covey — and they quickly ran into first-flight problems. A water evaporator that provides cooling to the ship during the climb to space and return to Earth was partly clogged with ice. And a device that provides electrical power to move an orbital steering engine was not working.

Neither problem was critical. Flight director Gary Coen said engineers were devising ways of thawing the evaporator before it is needed again and that backup power was available to turn the steering engine.

To the delight of a quarter-million people gathered on river banks and highways and an ecstatic NASA team in Launch Control, Discovery lifted off its seaside pad and streaked into cloudy skies. It remained in view less than a half minute, but the tension was incomparable and the sight was unforgettable.

Discovery, an American flag on its left wing, was making its seventh spaceflight.

Anxiety was highest as the ship went through a 30-second period of severe aerodynamic stress. It was during this stage of the flight that one of Challenger's booster rockets failed and triggered the Jan. 28, 1986 catastrophe, 73 seconds after liftoff.

'We sure appreciate your all getting us up in orbit the way we should be.'

— Frederick Hauck, Discovery's commander

Some television viewers reported what they thought was an errant flame shooting from the left booster rocket about 90 seconds after liftoff. Officials said an analysis revealed a harmless phenomena that causes flame from the exhaust to ''climb'' up the side of the rocket.

''It was not particularly unusual,'' said NASA's Steve Nesbitt.

The analysis that followed the Challenger disaster led to 56 major and more than 400 minor hardware modifications — and a new, more conservative launch procedure. Conservative or not, NASA launch supervisor Robert Crippen granted a waiver of wind guidelines to move the launch forward. NASA said he met with his 21-person oversight team, reviewing an analysis of the wind situation, before approving the waiver.

U.N. troops given Nobel peace prize

Peacekeeping soldiers play a 'central part in world affairs'

By Arthur Max
Associated Press

OSLO, Norway — Soldiers on the front lines of the United Nations' 40-year quest for peace won the 1988 Nobel Peace Prize on Thursday for steadfast duty in the cross fire of the world's conflicts.

The Nobel Committee said the U.N. peacekeeping troops built greater faith in the United Nations, which "has come to play a more central part in world affairs."

The award could bolster new U.N. peacemaking efforts to oversee shaky truce agreements in the Persian Gulf and Afghanistan.

In Jerusalem, peacekeepers broke open bottles of champagne to celebrate the prestigious award as the word was passed by radio from outpost to outpost. Five of the seven peacekeeping forces are in the Middle East.

"We are here to keep the peace, but winning the Nobel prize makes you feel good," said Canadian trooper Tony Mayfield, 22, who guards a crossing point between Greek and Turkish sectors of Nicosia, the capital of Cyprus.

Nearly 10,000 peacekeepers from more than 30 countries serve under the U.N. flag. Peacekeepers most recently were dispatched to Iran and Iraq under a cease-fire negotiated in the countries' 8-year-long war.

"There is great joy," said Timor Goskel, spokesman for the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL). He spoke from UNIFIL headquarters in Naqoura, Lebanon.

The citation from the Nobel Committee, made up of five Norwegians, said the troops showed the world's determination to settle disputes peacefully. It said they "made a decisive contribution towards the initiation of actual peace negotiations."

Some peacekeepers carry light arms, but they can fire only in self-defense. The United Nations says 733 peacekeepers have lost their lives since 1948.

Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, who headed the 76-member U.N. supervision group in south Lebanon, is among nine American hostages in Lebanon. Higgins, 43, was seized Feb. 17.

The prize was an indirect tribute to Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, who was not eligible because he was nominated after the Feb. 1 deadline.

Perez de Cuellar, speaking to applause at the U.N. General Assembly in New York, said the Nobel committee showed "that the quest for peace is a universal undertaking involving all the nations and peoples of the world."

The U.N. chief said he would accept the prize in Oslo on Dec. 10, the anniversary of benefactor Alfred Nobel's death in 1896. It carries a cash award of 2.5 million Swedish kronor, worth $390,000 dollars today.

U.N. officials did not say how the money would be used. The peacekeeping operations cost about $230 million a year, and officials say that likely additional operations in southern Africa, Western Sahara and Cambodia will raise the total to between $1.5 billion and $2 billion annually.

Committee chairman Egil Aarvik confirmed that President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev were among the 97 candidates and were "seriously considered" for the prize.

He did not explain the committee's decision. But when asked if the presidential election was a factor, he said, "Yes, we take everything into consideration, also that."

Reagan congratulated the peacekeeping forces.

"No, I didn't deserve it as much (as they did)," Reagan told reporters at the White House. "It was an admirable decision."

Reagan and Gorbachev were nominated for signing a treaty to dismantle land-based intermediate-range missiles, the first accord to reduce the superpowers' nuclear arsenals.

AIDS victims battle with insurers on treatment

The Associated Press

Doctors and patients claim they are being short-changed by insurance companies that are refusing to pay for certain drug treatments for those who suffer from AIDS or AIDS-related complex.

The treatment in question is an aerosol version of a drug called pentamidine that is used for those suffering from AIDS-related complex. It is used to help prevent a type of pneumonia called pneumocystis carinii pneumonia, one of the leading killers of those who suffer from the virus that causes AIDS.

"We know inhaled pentamidine saves lives," said Dr. Paul Rothman, a partner at Pacific Oaks Medical Group in suburban Sherman Oaks. "What the insurance companies who won't pay for it are saying is that 'You're costing us too much money. We want you to die.' "

Insurers, however, contended it still has not been determined whether the aerosol method works because of continuing studies.

According to Charles Meler, vice president and general counsel of Employers Health, it is not enough for doctors to believe a treatment works.

"That doesn't mean that scientific fact would support their belief," he said.

Thomas Jones of Sunland, who suffers from AIDS-related complex, is one patient who is fighting with his insurance company.

"It makes me feel very angry," Jones said. "You're talking about life. You're talking about thousands of people across the U.S., and how many are doing this?"

The Physicians Association for AIDS care, a group of more than 300 doctors who have treated over 25,000 patients with AIDS or AIDS-related complex, recently recommended reimbursement for aerosolized pentamidine to all state insurance departments nationwide.

Dr. Paul Keith, an AIDS specialist in Los Angeles, characterized the drug treatment as "a quantum leap in the prevention of this opportunistic infection."

"Now we're having to find out which insurance company pays beforehand," Keith said. "Now we're put in the dilemma of having to decide whether to give it free or not if they don't have the right insurance company."

Soviet leaders to 'face off' on reforms, sources say

By John-Thor Dahlburg
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The legislature and the Communist Party's policy-making body will shake up the Kremlin hierarchy in extraordinary meetings this week, a high-level source said Thursday.

The policy-setting Central Committee meets Friday and the Supreme Soviet on Saturday. The meetings brought officials rushing back to Moscow and sparked speculation that Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and his opponents would face off over his ambitious economic and social reforms. Soviet sources said there was "no crisis" in the leadership, but the abrupt change in plans of several top Kremlin figures clearly indicated urgent or unexpected business.

Tass reported Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze landed in Moscow Thursday afternoon after cutting short a U.N. visit. Defense Minister Dmetri T. Yazov ended a visit to India a day ahead of schedule.

The 1,500-member Supreme Soviet, the nation's parliament, usually convenes twice a year after meetings of the 300-member Central Committee. It last met May 24-26.

Soviet media reported Sunday that a regular session of the Supreme Soviet would begin Oct. 27, and the announcement Thursday of a special sitting at such short notice was highly unusual.

The Central Committee had been expected to meet by the end of October, but one Soviet source said plans for implementing Gorbachev's political reform were proceeding "faster than was expected."

The source, a member of the Central Committee staff, said the committee will approve changes in the party and the structure of government outlined at a party conference in June.

The reforms are intended to enhance the status of the party as the leading force in Soviet society.

The source called it "logical" that personnel changes would follow any change in the organizations' format. He spoke on condition of anonymity.

At its last meeting July 29, the Central Committee adopted a timetable for overhauling the Soviet political system, which also was discussed at the party conference.

That blueprint calls for a new, full-time legislature and a more powerful president — a post Gorbachev could take on.

The first deadline set was October, by which time the Central Committee said a draft law on amendments to the Soviet Constitution and on multicandidate elections of legislators was to be complete. In a Sept. 23 speech, Gorbachev said the party's 13-member Politburo would convene soon to review the draft law.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Vadim P. Perfiliev told a government news briefing Thursday that the Central Committee plenum "will mark another step in realizing the decisions" of the last party conference. The Central Committee source put the focus on changes in the party's structure.

Soviet sources also reported speculation among high-placed officials about possible changes on the Politburo itself, indicating uncertainty even at high levels about the agenda.

Face-off

The Central Committee is empowered to make peFsonnel changes in the Politburo, the party's ruling body.

The last full Politburo member removed was Geidar A. Aliev on Oct. 21, 1987. Aliev was a protege of former President Leonid I. Brezhnev, who now is harshly criticized for permitting corruption and stagnation.

The conference of 5,000 Communist Party officials held in Moscow three months ago approved plans to limit terms of Communist Party officials and a review of the party's 20 million members.

At that session, one delegate criticized by name President Andrei A. Gromyko, 79, and fellow Politburo member Mikhail S. Solomentsev, 75, linking them to the abuses of the Brezhnev era.

Some observers speculate that Gorbachev's backers want to remove 60 to 70 Central Committee members.

Gorbachev repeatedly has criticized the party apparatus for being involved in daily government operations and argues that the party should focus on broad policies and theories.

Personnel changes could give Gorbachev and his backers a chance to move out conservative party bureaucrats they see blocking the Soviet leader's reform. Gorbachev again pressed the case for sweeping reforms. "Any of the current burning problems underscores the necessity of radical change," he said.

9 injured in Eastern jet crash

The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica — A Miami-bound Eastern Airlines jet with 130 people aboard slid off the runway while taxiing for takeoff Thursday, breaking the landing gear, starting an engine fire and injuring nine people, officials said.

The Boeing 727 was quickly evacuated and firefighters soon extinguished the blaze in the left engine, said a control tower official.

The plane, carrying 122 passengers and eight crew members, apparently had problems with its landing gear shortly before the accident, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. None of the Americans aboard was injured.

"The plane had started taxiing, then we realized it was bumping along the runway. It left the tarmac, dropped its nose and ended up crosswise on the runway," the tower official said.

The jet came to a stop after the front landing gear snapped and the nose plowed into the ground just off the runway, he said. The engine fire apparently began when the engine scraped the runway after the landing gear broke.

The control tower official said most of the passengers were Costa Rican.

An official at the Hospital Mexico said all nine injured were Costa Rican and they were treated and released. The official refused to be identified.

Job Hopping Wins $1000 Abigail Abbott Scholarships for Three 1988 Winners: Kimberly H. Sullivan, Coastline Community, is congratulated by Louise E. Pomeroy, Abigail Abbott president, together with winner Jan Mari Tanisaki, Cal State Long Beach. Both worked as temporaries through Abigail Abbott to become eligible.

1988 Winner James Brennan, shown with Abigail Abbott president Louise E. Pomeroy, graduated from UCLA this year. He will attend Cornell School of Law this fall, having spent school breaks working as an Abigail Abbott temporary in past months.

1987 Winner Lisa Benson at CSUF with Louise Pomeroy, Abigail Abbott founder and president. Lisa entered the contest while working Christmas break of her final semester toward her teaching credential. The scholarship will go toward her masters degree.

1987 Winner Doretha Braggs at UCLA with Louise Pomeroy. Doretha says that her $1,000 scholarship will allow her to return to her studies sooner than she had expected. Doretha works part-time for Abigail Abbott.

The annual Abigail Abbott "Dollars for Scholars" winners list continues to expand with newly announced $1000 scholarships going to the schools chosen by the three Southern California college students. Their names were drawn from thousands of entry cards submitted by students who worked as temporary employees during the past year.

The announcement by Louise E. Pomeroy, president and founder of the 18-year old firm, added Jan Mari Tanisaki (Cal State, Long Beach), Kimberly H. Sullivan (Coastline] and James Brennan (UCLA) to the list of previous yearly winners from USC; UC, Santa Barbara; UCLA and Cal State, Fullerton. To be eligible, students took temporary positions through Abigail Abbott. "Students work during summer, Christmas holiday break, or part time." Pomeroy explains. "We find jobs for them through our 14 offices that fit their school and vacation schedules."

Additional winners will be drawn in August of next year from entries submitted for the new "Dollars for Scholars" program that goes into effect on October 3 of this year. There is no charge of any kind for the job placement. Students should contact their nearest Abigail Abbott office for details by consulting the Yellow Pages.

Abigail Abbott has offices in Los Angeles, Cerritos, Torrance, Long Beach, Brea, Tustin, El Toro and Newport Beach.

by Meehan, staff, members from the outside community, faculty, and ex-officio appointees will act as a "recommending body and as a forum for all existing entities on campus," the report included.

"Ideally, there will be an equal number of students and administrators on the committee," said Yarnell.

According to Doby, the center will be part of the larger community services effort which will report to Yarnell.

Doby said that the center is a step toward increasing UCLA student's participation in community service — one of the goals of California Compact, a movement developed by Chancellor Charles Young and Stanford President Donald Kennedy to coordinate community service efforts in California.

Doby expressed hope that funding for the center will come mainly from sources outside of UCLA, such as corporate foundations.

The center will be located in the third floor of the Men's Gym.

UC clerk's conviction is upheld

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — The conviction of an administrative assistant in the University of California at Berkeley's financial aid department was upheld Wednesday by a state appeals court.

The 1st District Court of Appeals declined to reverse Ida Johnson's conviction on two counts of grand theft stemming from her manipulation of student grant information and checks that were dispensed through the financial aid department in 1985.

In a decision written by Justice John Benson, the court said there was no merit to Johnson's contention that accomplice testimony at her trial was not adequately corroborated.

The court said there was independent testimony that Johnson had the opportunity to commit the crime: she was one of six employees who put information into university computers that generated student grant checks and a witness recalled seeing Johnson pick up checks from the disbursement office.

Students interested in producing freehand and/or computer generated illustrations for the DAILY BRUIN, meet at 112 Kerckhoff Hall at 1pm Thurs, Oct.6. or leave a message for the Design Editor at 825-9898.

Budget

tains the same reductions in Reagan's proposed Star Wars budget as the original legislation, the earlier bill's congressionally mandated restrictions on internal spending in the Star Wars program were removed.

The Strategic Defense Initiative, as the Star Wars anti-missile research program is formally known, would receive $4.1 billion in the bill, compared to the $4.8 billion sought by Reagan and the $3.9 billion authorized for this year.

The Pentagon wanted to spend up to $330 million of the SDI money on a space-based interceptor weapon, the first stage of an early deployment SDI program. The previous Pentagon bill would have restricted that to only. $85 million, but the new measure removes that limit.

The new bill also removes a restriction on flight testing of "depressed trajectory" missiles, which fly relatively low instead of into space as do other long-range atomic weapons. The U.S. has none of the weapons under development and no plans for testing, but the Soviets are believed to be developing the weapons.

Money to pay for the programs authorized in the bill is part of a separate Pentagon appropriation bill.

The measures are the major unfinished items on the congressional agenda as legislators try to wind up their work and quit for the year.

The new Pentagon bill also rewrote the complicated spending plan for the MX and Midgetman nuclear missiles, two weapons at the heart of a dispute over the future of America's land-based nuclear missile force.

The original bill proposed spending $250 million each for study of Midgetman and a railroad-based version of the MX and provided another $250 million to be used for either program next year by the incoming president.

The new bill provides $250 million for Midgetman, but says no more than $250 million of the MX money can be spent before Feb. 15. The remaining $350 million could be reallocated by whomever wins the presidency Nov. 8.

The bill also includes a 4.1 percent pay raise for the nation's 2.1 million uniformed military personnel.

UCLA Campus Parking Service: can't they pick up the pace a little?

By Kevin Bryant

Well, another year has begun for this nearly overcrowded university. Along with the hassle to get the right classes, pay fees, and of course wait in the never-ending lines in the ASUCLA Bookstore, students with cars must also deal with the hell known as Campus Parking Service.

This academic year started off as a pleasant experience when I strode to my mail box to discover that I had actually received parking on the first run. After nearly passing out from the good news, I soon realized that my assigned lot wasn't my first choice, but oh well — such is life when you don't have the athletic department to spoon-feed you everything.

Having received parking, I decided that the most intelligent and logical thing to do would be to pay the fees early before the rest of the masses moved in. Well, this decision soon turned out to vex me when I showed up to receive my permit less than a week later. After waiting in line for almost an hour, the attendant told me that I would have to come back another day because she was having trouble locating its exact spot amidst the jumbled mass of confusion that symbolizes the Campus Parking Service.

Since I was moving into the dorms early, I also needed a short-term permit until the Fall Quarter. Instead of proceeding to help me, she wanted to push me into another line even though she failed to produce the permit I had already paid for. Obviously, I am not the only one who has to deal with these gross inefficiencies. The woman beside me at the counter was still waiting for these unqualified employees to find her files and record of payment. Although this was just one day out of their operations, I am quite sure that this outrage persists every working day. While working people who are probably on their lunch breaks queue around the side of the building, the Campus Parking Service goes merrily right along taking its sweet ol' time. They probably enjoy watching disgusted people wait in never-ending lines rather than employing more people to help solve the problem. Even though they truly capitalize on the struggling student by charging an outrageous $66 per quarter, one would think that they might try to speed things up a bit more so they could swallow up money at an even faster rate. But then again, they probably bring in twice as much cash on their $18 parking tickets that dot so many windshields.

While it may seem that the Campus Parking Service is the next worst thing to the Post Office, unfortunately it isn't. That establishment lies on the other side of campus, and it is called Administration, otherwise known as Murphy Hall.

Bryant is an undeclared sophomore.

Some facts about Proposition 97

Editor:

California has been a leader in Occupational Safety and Health since an Industrial Accident Commission was established in 1913!

Governor George Deukmejian vetoed funding for CAL/OSHA safety and health enforcement other than in state and local government agencies in the 1987 state budget.

A law suit was filed which claimed that the governor exceeded his constitutional authority when he vetoed these funds (Ixta v. Rinaldi).

The case was heard by the Third Appellate District Court of Appeal of the State of California. This Court concluded: "The law does not give unilateral power to the governor to terminate CAL/OSHA."

The governor appealed to the Supreme Court of California. The court granted a review on January 21, 1988. The case is now pending oral arguments.

Should the State Supreme Court concur with the Appellate Court, or if Proposition 97 is approved on the November ballot, California Safety and Health regulations will be applicable to all private sector employees.

Prop. 97, if approved, will require the state to fund CAL/OSHA along with pursuing federal funds to strengthen this program.

Theft on campus can't be ignored

Editor:

Your article in the Registration Issue entitled "Staying Safe at UCLA" takes the narrow perspective that rape is the barometer to determine if the campus is safe from crime. The campus is trotted as being safer than USC, for example, because a person can walk, with escort, across campus at night.

Although rape is a heinous crime, it alone cannot be used to determine the security of persons and their property on this campus. The fact is that property crimes are rampant on this campus, yet only one sentence in the article mentions the problem of theft. The Crime Prevention Office has its head planted firmly in the sand under this problem. After my truck was stolen from Parking Lot 2, I attempted to find out from that office just what the statistics on auto theft on campus are. I was told by Crime Prevention that they don't keep track of that type of information! Since the time of my unfortunate experience in Lot 2, I have learned of five other auto thefts that have occurred this year in this lot alone.

Our offices and laboratories are no safer than our parking lots. This past month my office was burglarized. Two other times during my four years here, labs that I work in have also been broken into. In spite of this history of break-ins, the University continues to balk at my department's request to install adequate locks for which a master key cannot be made in five minutes.

Crime is indeed a major problem in L.A. and UCLA is no exception. Locking our cars and offices provides no security for our belongings or our files. It is time for the University to raise its head from the sand and decide what must be done to provide for the safety of both our persons and our property.

How do you feel about starting on a Thursday?

I don't think they explained it very well. They didn't say why they were doing it. And a lot of classes have discussions on Thursday and Friday, so either they call them off anyway, or people just don't go.

David Huntley

I think it would be better to start on a Monday, because a lot of classes don't meet, like discussion sections.

Amy Kolar

I guess I think it's a bad idea. But I can't prove it.

James Earl Jones stars in 'Fences.'

Hit play goes for the 'Fences'

By William Quinn
Senior Staff Writer

■ THEATER ADVANCE: Fences by August Wilson. With James Earl Jones, Courtney B. Vance and Lynne Thigpen. Opening Sept. 29 at the James A. Doolittle Theatre, tickets $35-25. No student discounts announced at press-time.

It's unfortunate there're no student breaks on the price of seats yet announced for the 10-week engagement of Fences, one of the best American dramas of the decade, when it opens Friday at the Doolittle Theatre in Hollywood.

Even the cheapest seats (in the balcony on a weeknight) will run $25, and the house after all belongs to UCLA.

The big "however," though, is that the quality of script (by August Wilson, 1987 Pulitzer Prize and Tony Award), performances (Tony for star James Earl Jones) and direction (another Tony for Yale Repertory's Lloyd Richards) make the production a Must-See in its Southland visit.

Wilson's last major Los Angeles production was Ma Rainey's Black Bottom, whose local engagement was only philosophically marred — by the inappropriateness of its venue (LATC, the enclave of the downtown white businessman against whom the play was designed to rail).

The playwright is currently represented on Broadway with Joe Turner's Come And Gone, scenes from which provided the best moments of this year's Tony Award telecast.

Homophobic 'Kingfish' offends

The press on Kingfish, the new black comedy starring Buck Henry at LATC, has been very weird. None of the critics seem to have been able to figure it out — at least they keep saying they don't understand its intent. Well, the response from here is that while a cigar is sometimes just a cigar, on the other hand, Mr. Freud, sometimes it's not.

To digress for a moment, one can sometimes guess, from an unusually disproportionate percentage of some ethnic or cultural minority in the lobby beforehand, the play's subject. For instance, there were more black people than usual at the opening of The Colored Museum. Likewise, LATC had an unusual number of gay men milling around the LATC lobby before last Friday's performance of Kingfish (usually one notices none there). I should have known something was up, but I wonder if they had been misled.

The play's first reviews mentioned fairly high up that Buck Henry was playing a

Mural program sparks community involvement

By I. Nordstrom
Staff Writer

Scattered from Dodger Stadium to Venice, the colorful, eclectic patterns and diverse themes of over a thousand wallworks make Los Angeles the nation's mural capital.

Securing that distinction for the city by commissioning nine murals to be produced by next summer, the new Neighborhood Pride: Great Walls Unlimited Program will also tackle the problems of youth unemployment and delinquency by hiring a crew of young people to aid in the creation of the murals.

"A community effort — that's the beauty of the program," says Joe Rodriguez, executive director of the non-profit Social and Public Arts Resource Center (SPARC), which will implement and oversee the new city-funded plan.

A five-member panel including Howard Fox, the Curator for LACMA, John Outterbridge, the Director for the Watts Towers Art Center, Senator Alan Sieroty, a Municipal Arts Commission member, SPARC board member Armando Duron, and Judith Baca, SPARC's artistic director, will review artists' submissions, recommend mural sites, and appoint community liaisons to work with the artists and local youths.

Artists are invited to submit plans for new murals or propositions for restoring "disappeared" murals which have been painted over or destroyed. The muralists selected will be paid $7,000; all costs of labor and materials will be paid by Neighborhood Pride.

The program "is setting a precedence nationally," believes SPARC operations director Jaime Cruz. Through it, schools, neighborhood agencies and the juvenile justice system will refer young people from 14 to 21 to work on murals in their own communities.

Neighborhood Pride offers "a larger benefit than just being able to paint," says Cruz, who looks forward to the program providing an alternative to the street life that may be a part of the kids' backgrounds. The young people will be "truly apprenticed to the master artist," he explains. "Really, it's a unique and rare experience. It's not just a job, it's exposure to learning a new kind of cultural expression."

Youths will not only "depict the environment of the neighborhood," Cruz says, but "work within the community." The hands-on experience of painting the mural will be a contrast and complement to the work of planning and preparing for it.

Baca herself has extensive experience working with young people, having begun a prototype project, The History of California mural, which she worked on with a team of 80 youths. The vast wallwork, over 2,000 feet long and still growing, has come to be known, appropriately enough, as Los Angeles' "Great Wall."

Baca's "Great Wall," located in the Tujunga Wash drainage canal in the San Fernando Valley, traces the history of those who, Baca has said, "remain invisible in conventional textbook accounts." With bold and incisive imagery, the mural recounts some of the ugliest moments of our history — the massacre of Chinese Angelenos in the Gold Rush years, and, some hundred years later, the tragedy of the St. Louis, a ship filled with Jews fleeing Hitler's Europe that was refused admission to the U.S. — and uncovers the less widely-known facets, such as Thomas Alva Edison's Mexican ancestry.

Two years after the Army Corps of Engineers proposed that Baca create the mural as part of a beautification project in the flood channel, she co-founded SPARC to further extend the wallwork. From its inception, SPARC has held strong ties to Los Angeles' mural heritage. The Venice-based center promotes opportunities for artists to produce, preserve and document murals; it also fosters art in other media.

SPARC's Mural Resource Center provides educational materials including extensive documentation, research and videos related to the production of various community murals. Equipped with artists' studios, SPARC acts as a support system for multi-cultural arts, preserving and cataloging as well as producing and exhibiting art that might not find a place in more conventional galleries.

"In some types of art, (the goal) is purely aesthetic," says Rodriguez, "but our strategy (with murals) is reactive. It adds the responsibility of involving the community in multi-racial settings."

An American classic revisited
Jim Cullum revives 'Porgy and Bess'

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

Composed in 1935, George Gershwin's opera Porgy and Bess has long been acknowledged as an American classic. The Jim Cullum Jazz Band is currently touring with a jazz rendition of the entire opera.

Cullum's seven-piece band will perform in a concert presented by UCLA's Center for the Performing Arts tonight in Royce Hall.

According to Cullum in a phone interview conducted to his home in San Antonio, the Royce Hall concert will be the band's premiere appearance in Los Angeles. "Los Angeles is about the only major city in the country where we haven't performed," he said. "It's just a quirk that it has happened that way."

Cullum has long been a fan of Gershwin's most famous opera. "I've admired the music all my life, like many others," said Cullum. "I think it's one of the great moments in American art and music. I have always enjoyed it."

As many other artists have done, Cullum originally set out to do a Porgy and Bess highlights album with his band. However, as the project progressed, the cornet player/bandleader started thinking of performing the complete opera.

"As we went along, I began to develop the idea that we can do the entire opera," said Cullum. "That's what sets our work apart from its predecessors. There's been many pop versions of Porgy and Bess over the years, but there's never been a complete one like this. Always, these things have been highlights from the opera."

To Cullum, the main appeal of the opera lies in its memorable, soulful songs, including the oft-recorded standard "Summertime."

"The strength of Porgy and Bess is in the songs, and it's not necessarily the story or the orchestration," said Cullum. "The real special part of Porgy and Bess is the quality of the writing in the songs, the power of the melodies in the songs."

The concert will feature no vocalists, being strictly instrumental. However, Cullum and his band have worked to transfer the vocal parts to the instruments.

"There are no singers," said Cullum. "We assigned voice roles to some of the instruments. The female voices are often carried by the clarinet, and the male voices are done by the trombone or sometimes muted trumpet."

According to Cullum, who collaborated with three other members of the band in arranging the piece, an instrumental version of Porgy and Bess has the advantage of capturing the opera's structural essence. "You're able to hear the mood and flow of the opera and the Sigourney Weaver as Dian Fossey.

Beautiful, compelling 'Gorillas in the Mist'

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

■ FILM: Gorillas in the Mist: The Adventures of Dian Fossey. A Guber-Peters Production. Written by Anna Hamilton Phelan and Tab Murphy. Director Michael Apted. With Sigourney Weaver, John Miluwi, Bryan Brown and Ian Cuthbertson.

Dian Fossey became famous for spending years studying and living with the mountain gorillas of Rwanda, supported by pioneering archeologist Dr. Louis Leakey and National Geographic Magazine. Her obsession to prevent the extinction of the gorillas put her into almost constant conflict with poachers, zoo representatives and local government officials.

Gorillas in the Mist is the new movie based on her story.

The film is devastatingly beautiful, and worth watching for the travelogue value alone. The landscapes of lush rain forests and the mountains of the Parc National des Volcans where the gorillas live are incredible, and the use of exotic faraway locations instead of the usual Hollywood tactic of shooting L.A. as New York, L.A. as Vietnam, or L.A. as Central America give it an authentic, almost documentary-like feel. There is no substitute for the real thing.

Portraying the character of the real Dian Fossey was a problem for the filmmakers. Despite her love for the gorillas, she didn't have much tolerance for people. When she died (hacked to death with a machete by an unknown assailant), she had made so many enemies it was hard to sort out who wanted to kill her the most. In making the movie they have done a great job treading the fine line of showing a person with real personal flaws — but whose intentions were good and whose mission, to save the mountain gorillas from extinc-

The real stars of the film are the gorillas. It's difficult and dangerous to get good close-up footage of the animals, so for some shots they used remote controlled mechanical apes which cost several million dollars. It is a constant absorbing challenge to sort out the real ones from the dummies. My theory is that the robots are the ones that sit next to the actors and don't move around very much. Real gorillas have tremendously flexible faces. If you get bored with the movie (you probably won't) this will give you something interesting to thing about. All in all they did a pretty good job. At least one crew member was seriously injured but the wild gorillas they did use.

The cast is excellent — from Sigourney Weaver, back from two bouts fighting aliens in her underwear ,on strange faraway planets, to Iain Cuthbertson as Dr. Leakey and Julie Harris as Roz Carr, an ex-patriot American. Bryan Brown is outstanding as Bob Campbell, the National Geographic photographer who leaves his wife to be with Fossey. He is the modern version of the great white hunter, sort of a Crocodile Dundee with a camera.

But best of all was John Omirah Miluwi as Sembegare, a native tracker who becomes Fossey's assistant. His friendly, quiet, intelligent presence makes

Pierce Brosnan and Helena Michell in 'The Deceivers.'

'Deceivers' tale of murder, adventure

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

■ FILM: *The Deceivers. Written by Michael Hirst from the novel by John Masters. Director Nicholas Meyer. With Pierce Brosnan, Shashi Kapoor, and Saeed Jaffrey. At the AMC 14-plex in the Century City Mall, and other locations city-wide.

The Deceivers, produced by Merchant Ivory (Room with a View, Maurice) and directed by Nicolas Meyer (Star Trek II, IV, Volunteers, The Seven Percent Solution) is the story of William Savage, a low-level administrator for the British East India Company in the early 1800s. Savage stumbles upon the existence of a bizarre cult group called the "Thugees" (deceivers) after witnessing the robbery and murder of a group of travelers.

The movie is based on John Masters' novel The Deceivers, a fictionalized account of the true exploits of William Sleeman, the British officer who led an effort in the 1820's to expose and destroy the Thugees, a secret and widespread cult whose members are estimated to have ritually murdered and robbed more than two million Indians. Once discovered, it took the British 20 years to deal with them; more than 400 members went to the gallows rather than testify against their compatriots.

William Savage is unique among the British in his interest in Indian customs and his ability to speak several Indian languages. It is while dressed as an Indian that he stumbles on the murders; after narrowly escaping, he becomes determined to catch the people responsible.

Savage proposes a general investigation to East India Company officials, but without sufficient evidence and authority, nothing happens. A site is found Nicholas Meyer has an office on the Paramount lot on Melrose, across the street from the famous Astro-burger restaurant.

It's always fun visiting the Paramount lot. You feel important when they check through the lists and finally decide to let you in. You can see shows like Cheers while they're being filmed, and even the office buildings look like something from a movie set or maybe a tame version of Disneyland without rides. But with all the money Universal is making on their tour, that may not be far away.

Inside the office you get the feeling that a lot of work gets done here, judging from the bits and pieces of scripts scattered all around the office and the stack of dirty coffee cups in the corner.

"I'm rewriting a picture for (producers) Ray Stark and Lee Ross," Meyer explains as I look around the room. "Bread and butter," he adds.

Meyer is a friendly, easy-going guy; you get the feeling he could just as easily be a fan instead of a famous writer/director. In fact, as he explained, that was the impetus behind his first big success The Seven Percent Solution, a story about the continued adventures of Sherlock Holmes.

"There are 56 short stories and four novellas, and as a fan of those stories, I was very sad when I reached the end." He has written and/or directed several other films, including The Wrath of Khan, Star Trek IV, Time After Time, and the classic comedy Volunteers.

His latest film The Deceivers (see review in this issue) is on a smaller scale than some of his other efforts, but presents a classic story of adventure and excitement in the days of the old British Empire in India.

Nicholas Meyer wrote and directed The Wrath of Khan, a huge success which was in many ways better than the original TV series; it also made the continua-

CULLUM: 'Porgy and Bess'

voices," he said, "so that's an interesting aspect of the work."

The bandleader's main original objective with Porgy and Bess was to make music "and to do something that was nice."

Subsequently, however, Cullum began to change his objective. "In addition to making nice music, we were going to be able to present the opera in a new way."

Performing the entire opera presents some definite challenges. "It's very demanding to perform; it's long; and it takes a great deal of musicianship to perform it," said Cullum. "It takes a lot of stamina: it's physically demanding, too."

Although the opera takes place over the relatively normal time of two hours, "it's very intense, and sort of wears you out," said Cullum.

Having made some 40 records over his career, the bandleader has been playing professionally since the late 1950s. Cullum and his father, a clarinetist, performed in the same jazz band for many years.

"I've been in Texas all my life," said Cullum. "I was exposed to the music through my father and his playing. As a teenager, I became real interested in the music, began to play it, and have continued to work for many years."

Cullum credited jazz pioneer Louis Armstrong as having had the most influence on him. "Armstrong overshadows the others in my opinion," Cullum said. "As jazz history kind of spins on out down the road, his music stands alone. He's been an inspiration."

Like Louis Armstrong, George Gershwin has also inspired Jim Cullum. At Royce Hall tonight, the Jim Cullum Jazz Band's rendition of Porgy and Bess will most likely manifest an enchanting mix of influences by two great figures in American music.

'Gorillas'

a tremendous impression, even though he doesn't say very much at all.

The film was produced by Peter Guber and John Peters, two of the most successful men in the entertainment business, along with Arnold Glimcher, who originally had been trying to get the movie made while Fossey was alive.

Peters was Barbara Streisand's hairdresser, and is rumored to have been the model for the main character in Shampoo. Peter Guber has one of the sharpest minds in the movie business today. In his spare time, Guber teaches evening film courses at UCLA, which are tremendously entertaining and informative even if you sometimes get the feeling you have wandered into a rah-rah real-estate seminar by accident.

Producing Gorillas in the Mist represents a big risk for Guber-Peters, beaause it doesn't fit into any of the convenient marketing categories. Even the title has given them problems — test audiences were not familiar with the book by Dian Fossey, and they thought the title was Guerillas in the Mist (you know, maybe a new Schwarzenegger flick).

It's hard to say how willing audiences will be to watch this film given the downbeat ending, but the filmmakers have done a great job with a difficult story. It's a beautifully shot, intelligent film, and may actually continue Dian Fossey's work. At the bottom of it all, it's not the black poachers or the Belgian zookeepers who are at fault in the slaughter of endangered species. As long as people in this country are willing to pay for stuffed heads and fur coats, the problem will continue.

'DECEIVERS': Chilling

nearby, where hundreds of people have been systematically strangled, robbed, and dumped in unmarked graves right under the noses of the British.

Convinced that local villagers know more about the killings than they are admitting, Savage decides to pursue the culprits himself. A breakthrough comes when he catches up with Hussein, one of the Thugees, whom he convinces to admit participation in the murders. But the fantastic story he spouts — of an organization participating in ritual robbings and killings across India for a period of 300 years — is so incredible that no one will believe it.

The rest of the story is Savage's investigation of the Thugees. He attempts to go underground, taking the identity of a low-caste Thugee gravedigger, in order to gather information to close down the "Deceivers" once and for all.

Amidst a landscape inhabited by hordes of Indian laborers, British officers in bright red uniforms with polished red buttons, a backdrop of crumbling palaces, immense fortunes, and ancient mysteries, the story tends more and more towards the psychedelic as Savage becomes involved in the drug-induced violence and rituals of the Thugees. Their main weapon is a handkerchief knotted with a couple of rupees inside, used to strangle unsuspecting travelers. And Savage finds he is very good at it . . .

The Deceivers presents a fascinating portrait of pre-Victorian India, when the country was essentially governed by the large British East India trading company. While the ending is a little confusing, the film is well-made, well-acted and visually stunning: an adventure horror story that is definitely worth seeing.

MURALS: Community

Unfortunately, the valuable wallworks seem to hold a precarious position in Los Angeles: at least five murals have been painted over in the last 16 months. Neighborhood Pride will — if temporarily — secure the safety of the project's new murals. "Part of the criterion (for a mural site) is a ten-year commitment for that space," Rodriguez says.

This idea of "neighborhood ownership" is the foundation of the new program; perhaps it will not only provide young people with "an impetus, a drive," and a sense of pride, as Rodriguez hopes, but will also invite communities to give murals their long-deserved recognition as one of L.A.'s most valuable cultural resources.

Board selections of the upcoming Neighborhood Pride murals will be on display for public review from Oct. 3-10 at SPARC. SPARC is located at 685 Venice Boulevard in Venice. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Admission is free.

MEYER: Challenge

tion of the movies possible. (You only need to take a look at Star Trek: The New Generation to see how dismal something like that could have been.)

They brought him back again to write Star Trek IV, by far the most accessible of the Star Trek movies; even my parents liked it. "I seem to be involved in the even numbered ones, II and IV," Meyer muses. "I like the people who make them. I admire Harve Bennet, Leonard Nimoy, and Bill Shatner. I was invited to participate in V, but I was heading off to India to do The Deceivers."

In both Star Trek films he showed both an ability to build tense drama as well as a sense of humor that allows him to pull good laughs out of situations without compromising the mood, characters and story.

Meyer laughed when I commented about William Shatner directing the upcoming Star Trek feature. "Soon Uhura is going to be directing. They're working their way though the entire cast."

Adventure in India

The Deceivers is based on John Masters' novel, a fictionalized account of the real-life exploits of the British officer who led the effort to wipe out the Thugees.

The excellent travel film series Armchair Adventures kicks off its 1988-89 season tonight with Russia Today, photographed and produced by Clay Francisco. It will screen at Wadsworth Theater in West Los Angeles at 8 p.m. (Located on the grounds of the Veterans Administration, Wilshire Blvd., west of the San Diego Freeway).

In order to encourage students to see the Armchair Adventures films, the UCLA Center for the Arts, which presents the series, has discounted the admission prices to $3.25 — half the usual rate.

All of the attention currently being focused on the Soviet Union under Mikhail Gorbachev makes this picture especially worth seeing. Francisco offers the viewer an up-to-date view of a far-flung, geographically and ethnically diverse country in a state of transition.

Francisco will narrate his film in person, taking the audience across the U.S.S.R.'s ten time zones — from the Baltic Sea to the Sea of Japan. Some of the places to be visited are Leningrad, the ancient city of Kiev, and some popular Black Sea resorts. The picture introduces the viewer to peoples and regions which are rarely seen by foreigners, such as the Uzbeks in Samarkand and the Chuk-chi, who herd reindeer for their livelihood. The filmmaker will examine the question as to how much Gorbachev's policy of glasnost (openness) has or has not affected contemporary Soviet life-styles.

— By J.D. Wolverton, Senior Staff Writer

DIRECTOR: 'Star Trek'

According the Meyer, "It's as accurate as we could make it. I don't thing Colonel Sleeman, who is the real historical figure, ever disguised himself as an Indian to go underground after the cult. It's the chief conceit of the novel.

"What got me interested was an offer from Ismail Merchant, of Merchant Ivory", Meyer explained. "I had always really loved the book, but it never really occurred to me that anybody would really make it into a movie. It's so strange, and difficult . . . "

Directing a movie in India for the first time presented a unique set of problems for Meyer. For one thing, the scope of the film and the desire for period authenticity required sets, props and locations that were hard to find.

"It's very hard to find English pre-raj stuff," he said. "We had to in one instance build a bungalow from original plans. We couldn't find the bungalow, so we just followed the plans and we built one."

They weren't in the country long before the production got mired in legal problems. Producer Ismail Merchant, (Room With a View, Maurice) even spent a few days in jail. Meyer seemed bitter about the situation as he explained it.

"There's a great tendency to talk about things in terms of euphemisms, but really, it wasn't legal problems so much as — we refused to pay a bribe to a man in Jaipur who expected one. He worked as a kind of location functionary on The Far Pavilions, and took them for about two million. We just didn't have that kind of money, and his response was to try to shut us down. The way he did that was to use bogus cultural organizations to declare that we were violating Hindu or Indian culture.

Harassment took a variety of forms, from petty sabotage to baseless legal suits and accusations that the filmmakers were sensationalizing Suttee, the ancient Indian custom in which a widow immolates herself on her husband's funeral pyre, which is now illegal.

"While we were there a real suttee took place," said Meyer. "When you look up close, it was a murder, not a suttee. She had been married for about a month, and her in-laws didn't want to give back the color TV that was part of her dowry, so they threw her on the funeral pyre and called it 'Suttee.' Half-a-million people watched and nobody did anything to help her. It's shocking, and very disturbing. But from our point of view what was even more dreadful was that we were accused of filming it for our movie. So I was in effect accused of being a "snuff" film-maker."

According to Meyer, one of the saddest harbingers of Third World countries is the corruption, "which is in direct proportion to their desperation."

"But this was a wealthy man, not some desperate poor person," he continued. "There were a lot of people who made money by doing honorable work. But the rich people and the politicians who were fronting for them were less interested in the fact that their constituents had honest labor and that we were bringing business to Jaipur; that didn't seem to concern them."

Eventually the case reached the courts who threw the suits out as completely groundless.

Even as you sense his horror at the situation, it's the kind of thing that perks his interest as a storyteller — truth that is stranger than fiction. Meyer went on to defend his film:

"If you ask people about the Thugees, depending on who you ask, you will get all sorts of answers," said Meyer. "There are some people who will claim that they were Robin Hood-like characters who stole from the rich and gave to the poor. Or they were anti-British; they only killed the Brits, but that wasn't true. It was the killing of a British soldier that was their undoing, in historical terms. Once the British got onto it, it took them twenty years to wipe it out, and they didn't wipe out all forms of banditry, they just wiped out the Thugees."

According to Meyer, the Thugees operated for over three hundred years; it's estimated that they killed two million people.

"It's an incredible story," said Meyer. "In the movie they refer to the whole conspiracy as absolutely incredible, ridiculous. They didn't believe that something like this was possible.

See MEYER, Page 31

Meyer

Not only did it happen, but in certain instances, the British knew about it.

"The film is a very accurate depiction of pre-Victorian, pre-raj India. We are used to movies about the British raj, but that wasn't created until 1857, and this film takes place in 1825."

Meyer is in the enviable position of often getting opportunities to write and direct, though seldom on the same project.

"I think I'm probably a better director when I direct my own material," he explained. "But my own material is often so left of center, or right of center, or whatever, that in this community I'm not very likely to get them off the ground.

"The Deceivers is a really good example of a film that wouldn't be made here, and wasn't. I tried for years to get a film made of Robert Davies' novel Fifth Business. Everybody said it was a good novel and a good screenplay, but nobody wanted to do it.

As a director, Meyer is at the mercy of a million variables: "the budget, the weather, the people all are things that are going to have a tremendous effect on the final shape of the movie," he said.

"As a writer you are in complete control. You are only limited by your own abilities. But it's also very lonely. I like them both, but they are very difficult jobs, and have very different satisfactions. I'm much more comfortable with myself as a writer, because I've been doing that much longer."

Plans for the future? "I'd like to make a movie about Don Quixote. I've got a screenplay, I've got my producers, and I'm looking for the money, like everybody else . . . " beginning of a foul recycling of an ancient trend — freedom once again in major work to be openly, cruelly insulting to the homosexual subculture.

'Kingfish'

Henry's lonely, drunken and bitter old queen preys on young male hustlers who prey back. At the curtain's rise he has been mugged and robbed by one. In the succeeding two acts, Henry enacts his revenge and the hustler winds up quite dead, eaten by Henry's dog, Kingfish.

A third member of the triangle is Hal the Hustler's other john and lover, a CIA agent named Finney. All three characters are among the most scabrous and least representative of stereotypes of members of the gay community. The play is presented with the high stylization of trendy Black Comedy (the dog Kingfish for instance is a rudimentary mechanical — a plywood box painted black with a length of rope for a tail). Perhaps that's why many writers have looked past the obvious nastiness of intent — blackguarding gays again — perhaps also in disbelief that the play could possibly be such gratuitous slander without a deeper point.

Historically, the fact that gay characters were only to be introduced to be set up for murder or suicide because they must be such twisted and bitter individuals has been well acknowledged as a tired and unimaginative convention. Those real members of the community who manage to contradict the dramatic and literary conventions by living fairly content and productive lives in spite of society's condemnation were too often too complex to be examined by hacks looking for shortcuts. That is until lately, but now we seem to see the onset of the return to tiresome form.

This reviewer could not help noting the supreme irony of Kingfish's vicious gay-bashing dressed up in the camp-Women-Behind-Bars theatrical style developed in the homosexual subculture.

The play's thesis is summed up in the lines of Finney: "Some children evolve the species with their stupid mistakes not to be interfered with. We get smarter. (But) some children are meant to be exterminated at birth."

In a day when inability to form relationships has been identified as a reason for gay promiscuity that lit the match to the AIDS epidemic, it is arguable that society should put forth a healthy mentality and instill it in the homosexual minority so that they might be encouraged to form stable relationships. Even if, as seems likely, AIDS decimates the current gay population (it's mentioned in Kingfish that Hal is probably "sick," another reason not for Kingfish to kill him off besides the fact that the character said he has set fire to dogs), each generation will automatically produce another 10-20 percent. It seems to be programmed into the race, perhaps as a spiritual challenge, if you have a religious point of view, or perhaps merely as an example of the happy frivolity of the gods if you're of a more pagan outlook.

Such gay-bashing in a major County and City-supported venue is unacceptable and would not be tolerated if the characters were Hispanic or Black. Avoid this play. If you're gay, you will not find it funny and if you're straight, its subject will not interest you.

'Fences'

March 1987, New York Times Drama Critic Frank Rich, the man who can make or break theater in the U.S., wrote in his strongly positive notice that the work was in the style of Clifford Odets, Arthur Miller and Lorraine Hansberry (Raisin In The Sun). Rich used phrases like "the power of the play," "grimy brick and smokestack-blighted sky" and "the wilderness of de facto segregation and barren hope."

Jones plays a working-class patriarch, circa 1957, the son of slaves, and a Pittsburgh sanitation worker. When young, as a talented baseball player, he never had any success with it in the segregated (pre-Jackie Robinson) days. The main conflict in the present action is with his son — played by Courtney B. Vance, also recreating his Broadway performance — who wants out of this rat race by becoming a T.V. (possibly) sports hero. Dad bitterly wants him to chase something more realistic. Secondarily, conflict arises in his marriage, mainly over his other women and children he has fathered.

Start saving your nickels and dimes, boys and girls, and The Bruin will keep mentioning better prices for its readers to the producers and operators of UCLA's Doolittle. (Maybe we should try mentioning it to Jones, since it's probably his salary that's causing the stiff tariffs.)

Women's Hoop inks 2 players

USA Today & Parade All-American center/forward Lynn Kamrath of Arrowhead High School in Hartland, Wisconsin and University of Colorado transfer forward Rehema Stephens of Oakland have enrolled at UCLA for the Fall Quarter.

The 6-4 Kamrath did not sign a letter of intent during the allowed NCAA signing period. However, she decided during the summer to accept a basketball scholarship to UCLA by officially enrolling in school for the Fall Quarter. Stephens played last year at Colorado, but left school after the season and the six-footer will be eligible for UCLA for 1989-90.

Kamrath averaged 15 points, 10 rebounds and six block shots a game for an Arrowhead team that went 28-2 and made the State Semifinals. She is also an excellent student.

"Lynn is regarded as one of the top 25 players in the nation and we are happy she has decided to attend UCLA," said UCLA Women's Basketball Head Coach Billie Moore. "Lynn is very mobile for her size and can play either center or power forward in our system. Rehema has the quickness and speed we need for our team and I'm looking forward to her eligibility for 1989-90. With the addition this hear of Lynn to go with our other three recruits, I feel that we again had one of the finest recruiting years in the nation."

UCLA had earlier signed USA Today & Parade All-American forward Molly Tideback and local All-CIF point guard Dede Mosman. They join a Bruin team that returns four starters and eight of its top ten players from a 19-11 team.

Golf team takes 3rd in Japan

The UCLA women's golf team finished third in the USA/Japan Friendship 54-hole tournament held September 20 and 21.

The Bruins shot 954 in the tournament, behind first-place finisher Nihon University (945) and Tulsa University (949), the team that won the NCAA championships last year.

Jean Zedlitz led the Bruins individually, shooting a 233 to take third in the tournament overall. She was closely followed by teammate Debbi Koyama, who took fourth with a 235. Other top Bruin finishers were LaRee Sugg (11th, 244) and Christy Erb and Paige Wery (17th, 248).

UCLA's next competition is October 14-16 at the Tulsa Invitational.

Canseco denies drug use

The Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Jose Canseco "has no idea" where newspaper columnist Thomas Boswell got the idea the Oakland Athletics slugger used steroids, but he's not happy that Boswell shared the allegation with a national television audience, Canseco said on Thursday.

"It was an ignorant statement, and usually I don't pay attention to ignorant statements," said Canseco in Minneapolis after the A's beat the Twins 6-2. "There was no background and no basis to it.

"He said I gained 50 pounds over a summer — that's ridiculous. He's not a very knowledgeable person. I have no idea where he got that stuff from. I was surprised as much as anybody else was."

Boswell, who writes for The Washington Post, was appearing on the CBS-TV show Newswatch early Wednesday when he told Charlie Rose that Canseco was "the most conspicuous example of a player who has made himself great with steroids."

Canseco, 24, last week became the first player in major league history to steal 40 bases and hit 40 home runs in the same season. He was the American League Rookie of the Year in 1986 and is one of the key reasons the Athletics have been the dominant team in the AL West this season.

Canseco said he hadn't yet talked with agent Dennis Gilbert about the possibility of taking legal action against Boswell.

On the program, Boswell also said A's manager Tony La Russa told him earlier this year that he thought Canseco had made "some mistakes" early in his career.

Boswell, who said other American League players called steroids a "Jose Canseco milkshake," said it was clear La Russa was talking about steroid use.

But La Russa said after Thursday's game that he was talking about playing mistakes.

"All you had to do was watch him play his first year to see he made a lot of mistakes," La Russa said.

"That's a very irritating inference that he took," La Russa told the San Jose Mercury News. "It wasn't anywhere near what I meant ... It bothers me that he put me in there as a source. It's bull."

Boswell was not at the Post Thursday afternoon, and he didn't immediately return a message left on his home answering machine.

With the playoffs coming up, Canseco said he wasn't going to let the story bother him.

"When someone says something as ridiculous as Mr. Boswell said, you can't let it bother you," the rightfielder said. "It's almost like it was a joke, but I don't think it was."

Steroids have been on the front pages all week because of Olympic sprinter Ben Johnson of Canada, who set a world record in winning the 100-yard dash, then lost the medal and the record when he tested positive after the race for the steroid stanozolol. Others caught using the drug at the Olympics in Seoul were two Bulgarian weight lifters, who lost gold medals.

Soccer back up over .500 mark

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

Remember that old saying that the third time is the charm?

Well, it proved true for the men's soccer team Wednesday night in a 1-0 overtime victory at Cal State Fullerton.

UCLA's Will Steadman scored the only goal on a penalty kick in the 104th minute, but it wasn't the first time that the Bruins had hit the net.

Steve Black hit a ball to Ray Fernandez inside the penalty box, but as soon as Fernandez got the pass, the linesman's flag went up. The result was offsides and no goal.

Mike Kafka then scored what appeared to be a goal inside of a crowded penalty area, but it was disallowed for ungentlemanly conduct. According to the referee, Kafka had told a Titan player to 'leave the ball' three times — a rarely called decision which went against the Bruins.

UCLA dominated the flow of play throughout the contest, according to assistant coach Dean Wurzberger. "Soccer is a sport where one team can dominate the game and run the play, but finishing is the ultimate test," noted Wurzberger.

"We dominated by our soccer playing ability — they were hitting and hoping for a mistake. We felt the way we were playing that the longer we played, the better the chances that we would score."

Billy Thompson showed that was true by getting fouled in the box to warrant the free kick and make his coach a bit of a prophet.

"Before the game, we actually thought that free kicks outside of the box and penalty kicks could decide the game," commented Wurzberger after the contest.

That's the way this one turned out, as Steadman put home the game winner.

"We practiced (penalty kicks) a lot this week," mentioned Wurzberger, "and so everyone knew he was on the kick. He wanted to take it and did the job."

The win, which Wurzberger deemed the most composed effort of the season, puts UCLA at 5-4, the team's first winning mark to date.

After compiling a 3-3 preseason record, the Bruins opened up regional play with a tough 1-0 defeat at the hands of Santa Clara.

Then the team returned home to hammer San Jose State, 6-1, before pulling out its first close win of the season in Fullerton. "It's been feast or famine for us. We finally pulled out a close one," remarked Wurzberger.

The next test lies in Fresno this Sunday, where the young Bruins will meet a squad which is inexperienced in its own right.

Gone are Nigerian stalwarts Chris Ogbodo and Femi Olukanni, leaving a freshman front line to test the UCLA defense.

Fresno State is 4-4, just one win behind the Bruins, so it should be another close match between the two teams, much like many of their other recent clashes.

Last year, UCLA posted two victories against the Bulldogs, a thrilling, 2-1 overtime decision during the regular season, and a 1-0 opening round playoff win.

"It should be a close game, but I like our chances," surmised Wurzberger.

whereas most squads have two hole men at most.

Combining this asset with the speed of junior Mark Maretzki and shooting accuracy of sophomore Javier Escobar, the Bruins will be expected to do well. The play of senior goalie Mike Vanderwaerdt will be crucial. But, as usual in water polo, home pool advantage is important, and this weekend the surprising Cardinal will have that on its side.

Going into the tournament, UCLA is leading the Coaches'Poll with a flawless 12-0 record. Rounding out the top 10 is Cal (12-0), Stanford (12-1), USC (7-1), No. 5 Long Beach (4-5), No. 6 UC Santa Barbara (8-0), No. 7 UC Irvine (7-5), No. 8 UC San Diego (5-6), No. 9 Fresno State (5-5) and No. 10 Navy (8-5).

UCLA proved its top ranking on Tuesday night with a 9-4 victory over Cal State Long Beach. Rousseau chipped in three goals, while Peterson had two, in leading UCLA to its 12th straight win.

Although favored going into Tuesday's contest, UCLA had plenty to worry about. Seniors Fernando Carsalade (groin) and Leonard (back) were both recovering from injuries along with Escobar (back). The 49ers, who are off to a slow start after a high pre-season ranking, were hungry to impress the large crowd on hand in Long Beach — as well as the Prime Ticket television cameras.

The match began after many delays due to technical difficulties, and both teams responded with sluggish play. CSULB tallied first, as hole man Kyle Kopp scored the first of his two goals.

Rousseau evened things up during a Bruin power play (six-on-five situation), and the score remained tied the rest of the quarter.

In the second period, UCLA's defense took over, as Fernando Carsalade's three second-quarter steals shut out the 49ers and took a 3-1 lead into halftime. Rousseau scored his second goal to make it 2-1, while Escobar hammered in a shot after beating his defender with a nice fake.

Long Beach showed its determination in the third by scoring twice to tie the game at three, but a shot by junior Marcelo Carsalade put UCLA back on top to stay. UCLA led 4-3 after three.

The fourth quarter proved to be the back-breaker for the 49ers, as they were unable to stop the Bruin offensive surge. UCLA found the cage five times in the final frame to assure victory. Junior Mark Maretzki showed why he is lethal during power plays, as he rifled in a shot to put the Bruins up, 5-3.

Fernando Carsalade followed that with a no-look shot to make it a three-goal advantage. Peterson caught fire, putting in the next two shots with assists by Marcelo Carsalade and Maretzki. Beach's Kopp tallied the only 49er goal of the period, to make it 7-4, but any momentum was quickly stopped when Vanderwaerdt stopped Kopp one on one.

The icing on the cake was a late goal by Rousseau, giving UCLA the 9-4 final.

Bruin head coach Bob Horn said he was not surprised that Long Beach stayed with his squad for three quarters.

"They're a darn good team and will be reckoned with at the NCAAs. . .but our depth was the difference," he said.

Horn added that Vanderwaerdt has made the most improvement on the team recently and is quickly silencing the critics who predicted that he would be the weak link on the team.

UCLA will return to the Southland to play USC on the road on Saturday, October 8.

Top Pac-10 teams face tough games

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

Although it's still early in the Pac-10 season, the Race for the Roses is starting to heat up, with two huge games rounding out the full slate of contests this weekend.

The No. 2 team in the country, UCLA, heads to Seattle and the "Doghouse", to face off against the Washington Huskies. The Bruins have not won in Seattle since 1978, and the 17th ranked Huskies should put up a tough fight at home.

Crosstown rival Southern Cal, coming off its big win over the Oklahoma Sooners, travels to head coach Larry Smith's old stomping grounds to battle Arizona. The No. 3 Trojans have the Rose Bowl and quite possibly the National Championship on their mind, while the Wildcats will want to ruin their former coach's homecoming.

The defense was the key last week against Oklahoma, as the rugged Trojan defenders held the Sooners to 89 yards net rushing. Led by Pac-10 Defensive Player of the Week Scott Ross, who had 14 tackles, the Trojan defense hammered Oklahoma's vaunted running game.

Quarterback Rodney Peete is third in the league in total offense, racking up 234 yards per game, although he has thrown five interceptions to only two touchdowns. Peete will most likely be without the services of tight end Paul Green and Pac-10 Offensive Player of the Week Erik Affholter, who both suffered injuries in the big win. Aaron Emmanuel is also out for several weeks with a severe ankle injury. The loss of those three players is a big break for the Wildcats.

Arizona, which lost to Oklahoma two weeks ago, 28-10, has been picked by many as an up-and-comer in the Pac-10. Led by All Pac-10 nose guard Dana Wells, the defense has been solid, and the 'Cats are always tough at home.

A key for Arizona will be quarterback Bobby Watters. Watters is rated last in the conference passing, and if Arizona plans to upset the tough Trojans, Watters will have to perform.

The rest of the Pac-10 will play out of conference, trying to improve on the stellar 19-3 record that has been posted against inter-conference foes.

Stanford hits the road to South Bend, playing the Fighting Irish under the Golden Dome. Notre Dame is currently No. 6 in the country.

Washington State travels South to Knoxville, to face sorry Tennesee. The Volunteers are 0-4, while the suprising Cougars are 2-1, 2-0 out of conference. Johnny Majors will have to stop Timm Rossenbach, the conference's second leading passer, and Steve Broussard, who leads the conference in rushing.

First place Oregon, currently 2-0 in the conference, takes a break and flies down to Jack Murphy Stadium to face 1-2 San Diego State. The Ducks are led by Billy "The Kid" Musgrave, who is another one of the league's outstanding passers.

Rounding out the schedule, Oregon State hosts Fresno State, ASU has a laugher at home with Lamar and the Golden Bears of Berkeley face the Spartans of San Jose State at Strawberry Canyon.

Lewis proves golden

it would take to be world class, and if UCLA could help him do it," Venegas said.

"We knew he could become world class within a year — but no way did we think he'd become an Olympic champion. Anybody who tells you that 'they knew' about Steve winning the gold is probably exaggerating or lying to you."

Lewis also asked quite a few questions about Smith — a factor himself who played a large role in the success of both UCLA quarter-milers in Seoul.

"It was a big advantage having John Smith at the facility, the guys didn't have to worry about incidentals. Also, they had immediate feedback after every race, which is 90 percent of the game," noted Venegas.

Smith is an interesting story himself. A former UCLA great from the early 70's, Smith still holds the world record in the 440-yard dash and was a solid favorite to win a gold at the 1972 Games in Munich. A hamstring pull right before he was to race, though, caused him to pull out and cast a shadow of tragedy on his brilliant career.

He turned to coaching and this year seemed to have found a gold mine in his two quarter-milers, Lewis and Everett. It was often noted that perhaps Smith, through his highly-regarded coaching at UCLA, could taste the gold that injuries had denied him.

He was not to be disappointed. Smith's joy was evident in Seoul as he embraced Lewis jubilantly after the two were sure he had won the gold.

"I'm flabbergasted," Smith told the Times. "He'll be one of the great quarter-milers of all time."

The game isn't completely over for Lewis and Everett — the 1600 meter relay comes this weekend. The two will join Reynolds and a fourth person to be named later on a jaunt towards a potential world record.

With Reynolds, Everett and Lewis running three of the fastest four times in the open quarter ever, the potential is stunning. And if Venegas had his way — he'd add Phillips to give UCLA athletes three of the four legs.

"Danny Everett would go first, Andre second, Butch third and Steve last only because I believe the Olympic Champion should run anchor leg," Venegas said.

"They'll be motivated to win, but if they get together, and get motivated to break the world record, they could destroy it. The only time the U.S. had problems is when they get caught in traffic, so it's important to get out fast and break away from the pack."

Lewis and Everett already hold part of the NCAA record in the 1600 relay, so adding the world record to that stock would be rather impressive.

In fact, many felt that the long collegiate season would burn out the two Bruins by the time the Olympics rolled around.

No, folks, Everett and Lewis did not burn out on the Seoul track.

They burned it up.

Cross Country hits road to Stanford

UCLA harriers face early test

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Laura Chapel and Melissa Sutton will travel with the cross country teams to Stanford this weekend.

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

The UCLA men's and women's cross country teams will face their biggest tests of this young season at the Stanford Invitational, set for tomorrow in Palo Alto.

The Bruin squads hope to better last year's results, which saw both the men and women miss qualifying for the NCAA Championships. The Stanford Invitational could show just how far the blue and gold has come since last season, as both teams will face stiff competition.

Last year at Stanford, the Bruins, with seniors Eric Reynolds and Paul Jaspers, finished eighth — and both runners have graduated. Four other top Bruin runners, however, have returned this season. And along with a redshirt and a junior college champion, this corps of runners may be even stronger.

But just how strong the UCLA men are remains to be seen. "Stanford is always one of the biggest invitationals," noted head coach Bob Larsen. "We'll know a lot more where we are after this meet."

UCLA will square off with such Pac-10 rivals as two-time champion Arizona, USC, Cal, Arizona State and Stanford. UC Irvine and Fresno State could also give the Bruins a run for their money.

After years of mediocrity, UCLA will have the opportunity at the Stanford Invitational to re-emerge as a team to reckon with. "We'll be able to see if we have truly made a step back," he said. "It's too early to get excited. I just hope we can continue to run like we have (in the past few weeks)." Two weeks ago, UCLA bested seven other schools, including Cal and Fresno State, in winning the Fresno State Invitational.

Larsen hopes to keep that successful pace with the return of senior Joe Nitti to the Bruins' varsity. Nitti, who ran in all six varsity races last season, has recovered from a bout with tendonitis and will probably make his 1988 debut tomorrow, according to Larsen.

Rounding out the varsity six will be the 1987 California Community College cross country champion, junior Mark Dani, redshirt senior Jim Ortiz, returning juniors Victor Santamaria, Beat Amman, and Christian Cushing-Murray, and freshman Richard Erbes.

As with the men's team, the Stanford Invitational will be a testing ground for the UCLA women's cross country squad.

According to head coach Bob Messina, the Bruins have "run well" in their two meets thus far, and indeed they have. They won the Riverside Invitational two weeks ago and last week topped 19 other teams to take first at the San Diego State Aztec Invitational.

Tomorrow's meet, however, is something special. "The Stanford Invitational offers us the most competition we've had all year," Messina said. "It's a gague as to what we're looking like nationally."

A national power like NCAA runner-up Texas, which won every one of its meets last year except the NCAAs, should provide a tough test for the Bruins. "If you know you're running with them, you know you can run with anybody," Messina remarked.

Two other Southwest teams, Arkansas and Houston, along with Cal, Stanford, Arizona State and UC Irvine, should race with UCLA for top honors.

Messina's varsity six for tomorrow's race will include seniors Kim Stewart and Pam Thompson, juniors Laurie Chapman (who finished fifth overall at the Aztec Invitational) and Laura Chapel, sophomore Melissa Sutton and freshman Kristi Bache.

Cross Country Notes — Recent results: The men won their first scored meet of the year, the Fresno State Invitational, Sept. 17. The varsity six, with their places and times for the 10,000 meters, follow.

Dani—second, 30:30.7; Ortiz—third, 30:40.2; Santamaria—14th, 31:39.5; Amman—15th, 31:51.2; Erbes—35th, 32:37.4; freshman Jeff Kern—36th, 32:40.9.

The women won the Aztec Invitational last Saturday in impressive fashion. Even the UCLA "B" team placed higher than 13 other "A" squads. The results for the 5,000 meter race follow.

Chapman—6th, 17:07; Stewart—10th, 17:25; senior Debbie Williams—15th, 17:40; Sutton—19th, 17:54; Bache—25th; 18:03; Thompson—27th, 18:06

Huskies?

Most certainly not, they insist.

"I'll bite back, believe me," said Ball, laughing.

And that's just what Donahue hopes his troops will do — bite back. The Bruins have not won in Seattle since 1978. In their last three trips to the cave of the canines, the Bruins have suffered from some '80s rabies, having lost two games and tied one.

But don't frown on that record. UCLA holds a special honor that no other Pac-10 school can claim — a .500 record in Seattle in the past 14 years.

The Bruins are 2-2-1 in that span. Each of the other eight conference schools is woefully unsuccessful in Washington.

Surprisingly enough, though, 1988 looks to be the year that UCLA does some dog-catching for the first time in a decade.

Sure, the Huskies are 3-0 and ranked No. 16 in the nation. But, as head coach Don James will tell you, it's an ugly 3-0.

"We've just played terrible," James moaned this week.

James' "terrible" translates into a 20-6 win over Purdue, a 31-17 win over Army and a 35-31 win over San Jose State in which the Huskies blew a 28-0 lead. To be noted in all three games, however, is the fact that each game was not decided until the final two minutes.

When asked to assess his team, James said, "I'm not sure I want to get that negative."

But Donahue will have none of James' complaining.

"All I know is Washington is undefeated," Donahue said. "I don't feel that they're unimpressive at all. They're 3-0 after three tries and that's as good as you can be."

To be sure, though, James seems to have reason behind his laments. His quarterback, Cary Conklin, is off to a less-than-impressive start, having thrown as many interceptions (four) as he has touchdowns.

Washington's power running backs, Vince Weathersby and Aaron Jenkins, who pose a formidable tackling threat, are not at full health right now. Weathersby should be ready to play, but a little dinged up. Jenkins, however, is listed as questionable and, in James' words, "could be ready in a few days, could be longer."

The defense is led by the outstanding Dennis Brown, an Outland Award candidate at defensive tackle. But James was reluctant to praise that unit, saying that "the defense has given us problems the last two weeks."

But James was not empty of praise. He had plenty of it for one team.

"I think UCLA is as overwhelming a team as I've seen in my 14 years in the conference," he said. "They took apart the teams they were supposed to and manhandled Nebraska. And they're not doing it with one guy — they're doing it with all sorts of players."

But if one had to choose one player who is leading the Bruins, it would be, naturally, Heisman Trophy candidate Troy Aikman, whose passing efficiency of 193.0 ranks him second in the nation. Aikman has thrown for nine touchdowns in his first three games.

Ball is off to a good start as well. His 378 yards and 6.0 yards a carry average rank him 10th in the nation.

But to Donahue, this game is not about numbers, it's about minds. It's about winning a game within the dreaded confines of Husky Stadium — something the team hasn't done since the days of long hair and even longer gas lines.

"I think that this game, and I have thought this for a long time, is going to be a very important football game for our team," he said. "Psychologically, this is a huge challenge for our football team. If our goal is to win the national championship, we've got to win in Seattle against an undefeated Husky team.

"The proof will be in the pudding. I will know an awful lot about our football team after this game. It should be a great matchup."

Bruin Notes — UCLA leads the nation in total offense (546.0 yards per game) and is tied with Oklahoma State for the lead in scoring offense (52.0 points per game). . . . Donahue remains high on Husky quarterback Cary Conklin, a Washington native, saying, "I begged him to come to our school. I thought he was the best quarterback in the nation coming out of high school — that's how we had him rated. I just couldn't get him out of (Washington). . . . Tight end Charles Arbuckle will miss the game due to strained ligaments in his left knee from the Long Beach game. Corwin Anthony and Randy Austin are expected to pick up the slack. "Obviously, it's a blow," Donahue said. "But at a program like UCLA, you have the philosophy that if you lose someone like that, someone's got to pick up the slack". . . . The game should be a boost to the Heisman hopes of Aikman, as ABC will show the game to 80 percent of the nation starting at 12:30.

RAY MARRERO/Daily Bruin

Troy Aikman will get a chance to strut his Heisman stuff in front of a national television audience Saturday at 12:30.

Lewis shocks the world in the 400 world-record holder and everyone's favorite to win the gold, American Butch Reynolds.

He also beat out his teammate, UCLA senior Danny Everett, who had won the NCAA 400 meter championship last June in Oregon.

In short, Lewis, the youngest member of the Olympic men's track team, beat out nearly every expectation held by track observers everywhere.

And if all that isn't enough, Lewis becomes the only current UCLA student to ever win a gold medal in Olympic men's track and field history.

"He's amazed us enough," UCLA men's track and field head coach Bob Larsen said, "that we don't count him out anytime."

It took a second look for Lewis to realize he had prevailed, however.

Only after he and UCLA sprint coach John Smith viewed the large screen replay of the race immediately afterwards, did the celebration begin.

"Let's see, let's see, let's see . . .," exclaimed Smith, before the coach and athlete embraced, after watching Lewis lean out Reynolds at the tape, now certain that the gold was Lewis'.

"I think I won because I wanted it more," said Lewis, who just one year ago was ranked in the mid-60's in the world rankings of 400 runners. "If you think you can do it, you can do it."

Smith and the world saw Lewis do it by coming out of lane six and out racing Reynolds, who finished with a 43.93, in the final 100 meters. Everett finished third in 44.09 to give the United States its first 1-2-3 sweep of the open 400 since the 1968 Mexico City extravaganza.

"In the Olympics, being in an outside lane is not that bad," UCLA assistant coach Art Venegas said. "You can set the pace on your own, and if the gamble pays off, you can be like Steve, or Andre Phillips (400 intermediate hurdle gold medalist out of UCLA) and win.

"Danny must be pleased that he ran the second best time of his life, and that his teammate won the gold. He has a lot of respect for Butch, but if he couldn't have won it, I'm sure he wanted Steve to get it."

Lewis took full advantage of the quick pace set by Nigerian Innocent Egbunike to put himself in the early lead. It just might have been his relative youth that helped him towards the gold from that point on.

"Steve had never broken 44 seconds, so having him in front didn't panic Butch as much as if Everett had been there, since Everett has run faster in the past," Venegas said.

As it turned out, however, Reynolds should have been worried.

"Butch probably assumed that Steve would falter," Larsen said. "And he just gave him too much room."

"When I realized I was strong enough to come home, it was just a matter of holding on," Lewis told the Los Angeles Times. "I was able to hold on all the way, just a race to the tape."

Because all eyes were focused on Reynolds and Everett, some saw an advantage for Lewis.

"He was a little looser because less was expected of him," Larsen said. "He could go in as a spoiler and upset the form chart."

Others saw it even simpler.

"Steve proved that when you get the best in the world together, he came out on top," Venegas said.

"Coming in people doubted me because of my age," Lewis said. "They say experience is the key to running fast. People put limits on age."

One who had no doubts was Venegas — the coach who recruited Lewis during his final season at American High School in Fremont, a suburb of San Francisco.

"I had so many conversations with Steve, and he was very aggressive in asking what

UCLA in for a dog-day afternoon?

Seattle has been tough on Donahue and Bruins

By Brian Murphy
Sports Editor

Are these the kind of comments a UCLA fan wants to hear before the Bruin football team (3-0, 0-0 in Pac-10 play) heads up to the University of Washington to play its first road game and first conference game of the year on Saturday?

— "Everywhere in our conference is difficult to play, but nowhere is it more difficult than in Seattle. It's a very, very hard place to play football."

Those words come from UCLA head coach Terry Donahue.

— "It's definitely one of the hardest places to play. They call it the Dog House up there. The fans are really close and really loud. It can throw your concentration if you let it."

Those words come from UCLA linebacker Carnell Lake.

— "It's a zoo up there. There are 75,000 fans in the stands, it gets real noisy, the winds start whipping. . . it's hard to focus."

Those words come from UCLA nose guard Jim Wahler.

— "The team gets behind us in the tunnel and starts barking. Then the fans are yelling and screaming. It's a difficult place to play."

And those words are from UCLA tailback Eric Ball.

So what's the deal? Is the UCLA football team, ranked No. 2 in the nation by the Associated Press and the United Press International, suddenly a bunch of wimps? Is the team that bullied and bruised the Ben Johnson-like offensive line of Nebraska afraid of a few

See FOOTBALL, Page 47

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

UCLA tailback Eric Ball has seemingly flown through the early season, as he is ranked in the nation's top ten running backs. He will face a challenge Saturday against Washington. ABC will televise at 12:30.

Spikers beat Texas

The No. 1-ranked UCLA women's volleyball rolled again on Thursday night, dumping the University of Texas in Austin in three straight games, 15-12, 15-6, and 15-5.

The women won despite a season-low hitting percentage of .168. Junior All-American Daiva Tomkus led the Bruins with a .400 hitting percentage, 13 kills, eight blocks and six digs. Freshman Elaine Youngs continued her impressive play with a .333 hitting percentage, 10 kills, 14 digs and six blocks.

The Bruins, now 11-0 for the season, will face Arizona State next on Oct. 7

No. 1 polo to play in NorCal

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

Off to its best start in 19 years, the UCLA men's water polo team will face one of its toughest challenges of the year, as the Bruins travel to Palo Alto for the NorCal Tournament, which startstoday. Present at the competition will be No. 2 Cal-Berkeley, No. 3 Stanford, No. 4 USC and No. 9 Fresno State, along with the No. 1-ranked Bruins.

UCLA will be heavily favored today when it faces Fresno State. On Saturday, the Bruins will take on the winner from the other bracket, most likely Cal or USC.

The remainder of the teams rounding out the field are UC Santa Barbara, University of the Pacific, Air Force, UC Davis and Claremont-Mudd.

UCLA's advantage in the tournament rests on its depth at the hole position — loosely equivalent to a center in basketball. Seniors Hank Peterson, Scott Leonard and Fernando Carsalade and junior Alex Rousseau are all competent hole players,

Unearthing Peruvian gold

Wealth of relics 'unbelievable'

By Irena Auerbuch
Staff Writer

UCLA anthropology Professor Christopher Donnan's reaction when called in to examine artifacts from a recently unearthed Peruvian burial site was a terse one: "I had never found anything like it."

Donnan was speaking of the tomb of a Moche warrior-priest uncovered by Peruvian archaeologist Walter Alva between the summer of 1987 and spring of this year near the village of Sipan.

The Moche civilization, which flourished in Northern Peru between 100 and 800 A.D., declined because of a devastating famine and has since been the object of extensive research.

The burial site was discovered as a result of a coincidence. In February of 1987, local Peruvian police confiscated stolen artifacts near the then undiscovered burial site. Inhabitants of a nearby village, lured by the possibility of unearthing riches, began frequenting the

Alpers named new AAP administrator

Honors dean replaces Lara as program's top official

By W. Kevin Leung
City Editor

In a move to bring the Academic Advancement Program "into the heart of the College of Letters & Science," UCLA administrators announced Friday a change in the top management of the program.

On Oct. 1, Edward Alpers, dean of Honors and Undergraduate Programs and a tenured professor, replaced Assistant Provost Juan Lara as top administrator of the advancement program, the two told approximately 90 staff and administrators in the Faculty Center late Friday afternoon.

The move will "maximize" service to students and better involve faculty in the program by centralizing all undergraduate support programs, Alpers said.

Answering a question from the audience about the possible "mainstreaming" of the program, Alpers said he does not believe the new leadership will neglect the specific interests of low-income and minority students, whom the program serves.

In various protests last year, critics of the advancement program accused administrators of not addressing students' needs and of plans to dissolve the unit.

"Bringing the program to the center doesn't mean it will lose the programmatic ideology," Alpers said. But rather, along with the honors and other undergraduate programs under the dean, the college will offer complete support for all students, he added.

Problems of low retention and graduation rates must be dealt with by the whole university, the dean said. The main problem does not necessarily occur during the freshman year and should not be the sole responsibility of the advancement program, he said.

Putting the programs under one office will maximize efficiency and facilitate the exchange of ideas among the programs to offer better, uniform service to all students, Alpers explained. Closer communication among the units will also determine unmet needs of the students, he added.

As a faculty member himself, Alpers said he will involve more faculty as well as students in decision-making. The faculty members can best advise on how the program can complement their teaching, he added.

The message of the change is that the advancement program is no longer "at the margin" of the university, said program director Adolfo Bermeo. Bermeo will remain director of the program, but will now report to Alpers instead of Lara.

Although student counselors and tutors — who often were the program's strongest critics — were not invited to the announcement, Alpers said he will schedule a meeting with them in the near future to discuss his

UCLA elementary school discusses merger

By Irena Auerbuch, Staff Writer

UCLA and the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District have engaged in preliminary discussions concerning the joint governance of UCLA's Corrine A. Seeds University Elementary School, according to a letter from Chancellor Charles and Graduate School of Education Dean Lewis C. Solmon.

Seeds UES, a laboratory school of the Graduate School of Education located on the UCLA campus, is currently operated by the graduate school alone.

"We have always been looking for ways to improve UES," Solmon said, addressing the discussions between UCLA and SMMUSD. He explained that the discussions came about as a result of a suggestion from the chancellor's office to "look at possibilities beyond the (UCLA) campus."

Solmon stressed that although the forthcoming expansion of the John E. Anderson Graduate School of Management will be "encroaching upon UES territory . . . there is no way we're getting off campus this year.

"The perception that we have to get off campus because of the Anderson School is wrong," Solmon said.

GSE and UES faculty are currently in the process of deciding whether or not joining SMMUSD would be advantageous to all parties involved.

Convicted URL rapist faces sentencing today

By Eugene Ahn

A San Bernadino County man convicted of raping a UCLA student in the University Research Library last year will be sentenced today in Los Angeles County Superior Court.

Nathan Johnny Brocato faces up to 20 years in prison for two counts of rape and one count of attempted rape. The charges, all felonies, stem from a single rape on Oct. 5, 1987 — almost one year ago. Brocato was convicted last month.

Judge Laurence J. Rittenband will deliver the sentence at the county superior court in Santa Monica, department C, at 9:15 a.m., according to the court clerk.

Both Deputy District Attorney Patricia Wilkinson and court-appointed defense counsel, attorney Ezekiel Perlo, could not be reached Friday afternoon to discuss today's sentencing.

At today's proceedings, the prosecution and defense may address the court before Judge Rittenband delivers Brocato's sentence. Their arguments will help him determine Brocato's jail term and possibilities for parole.

Under California law, the victim may also speak to the court before the judge declares a

UCLA Bruins bring home 16 golds from Games

The Games of the XXIV Olympiad were a complete and utter success for UCLA athletes, as current and former Bruins brought home 21 medals, including 16 golds.

As a country, UCLA finished eleventh in total medals, and with 16 golds, UCLA accounted for almost half of the gold medals (36) won by the United States.

Bruins were involved in some of the biggest and most memorable moments in the these Summer Games.

Who can forget Jackie Joyner-Kersee's world record in the heptathlon? Or the fact she came back two days later to win the gold in the long jump?

Then there was Flo-Jo, Florence Griffith-Joyner, racing to two Olympic records, in the 100 and 200 meters. She also set a World record in the 200m and then scooped up two more medals, a gold and a silver, in the relays.

Steve Lewis shocked the world, burning up the track on his way to a gold medal in the 100m, beating out world record holder Butch Reynolds and teammate Danny Everett, who took second and third, respectively.

Program to recruit teachers

Officials plan to identify 2,500 hopefuls by year's end

By W. Kevin Leung
City Editor

UCLA officials announced plans to recruit undergraduates for the teaching profession Friday, citing the nation's "desperate" need for qualified instructors.

Administrators at the Graduate School of Education hope to identify 2,500 undergraduates this year who want to become teachers, Assistant Dean Juan Lara told the Daily Bruin. They hope to maintain the interest of those prospects, and to give them support while they seek degrees.

Juan Lara

Although the effort will be in the planning stages this fall, Lara said administrators want to offer students paid internships, summer employment in county or state school districts, exposure to superior teachers and, eventually, career placement.

UCLA's efforts are more than altruistic. Large numbers of college professors are expected to retire in the next 10 years, while the university's problems with retention and graduation are often blamed upon inadequacies in elementary and secondary school education.

"We can moan about that and complain about that, but we have a responsibility at UCLA and, really, at the whole high education system to do something about that, bit by bit," said Edward Alpers, dean of Honors and Undergraduate Programs at

Changes may help sorority system

Limits on pledge classes designed to prevent imblances, house closings

By Irena Auerbuch and Shana Chandler
Staff Writers

To prevent large discrepancies in pledge class size as well as the folding of local chapters because of an insufficient influx of new members, changes were implemented in sorority rush this year.

Changes include the establishment of a "cap" on the number of pledges the houses can accept "so that the larger houses could stay (at the same enrollment) and some of the smaller houses could grow," said Delta Delta Delta rush chair Andrea Araghini. In addition, women who rush are now asked to indicate four preferences — among the houses they are considering pledging — instead of the previous two.

In the past seven years, four sorority chapters have folded at UCLA, among them Phi Mu, which closed its UCLA chapter last spring.

The usual quota per house is 46 to 53 members, according to Laura Bajuk, Office of Fraternity and Sorority Relations adviser. However, no restrictions have been placed on the size of pledge classes in the past.

"I thought there was a great imbalance last year," said Alpha Epsilon Phi rush chair Ilisa Halpern. "A few houses were extremely over quota, and a few were extremely under quota. I thought that (the cap system) worked and I really think it was successful in equalizing the row."

This year, 11 of the 14 houses at UCLA met or exceeded the quota; however, three did not, according to Bajuk.

"There is a need for some guidelines," Bajuk continued, "and we feel they're reasonable because everyone (who rushes) can be accommodated into a house."

The quota is determined by dividing the number of rushees by the number of houses. The number changes each day, Bajuk explained, because some women decide to withdraw from rush.

Several sorority members thought that fewer women than usual participated in rush. "Maybe the incoming freshmen are more academically oriented and would wait until sophomore year to rush," said Delta Gamma rush chair Michelle Lozano. She added that a lot of older girls — including transfer students — are coming through rush.

Pi Beta Phi rush chair Suzanne Tinder recalled that when she pledged her house in 1985, there were 17 sororities at UCLA. "There are 14 now," she said, "and there are houses that are getting closer and closer to folding."

Tinder explained that the cap system was implemented "so that we don't have houses not making quota or going 30 people over." The large disparity may lead to the folding of an already weakened house, she explained.

Halpern supported the cap system emphatically. "We want to increase the strength of the system as a whole, but also that of individual houses that may need it."

She expressed some doubt, however, about the efficiency of the new preference system. Because rushing women are now asked to list four houses they would prefer to pledge instead of two, the house that accepts them may be their fourth choice instead of their first. This could lead to more depledging, Halpern commented, although the results are still unknown so soon after this year's rush.

The three houses that did not meet quota may hold continuous open bidding until the number of pledges increases, as well as hold informal winter and spring rush, Bajuk said.

Sorority rush usually takes place once before the beginning of each academic year.

Westwood welcomes arts and crafts show

By Deborah Lopez, Contributor

Nearly every kind of taste and pocketbook met its match this weekend, at the 38th Semi-Annual Arts and Crafts Show in Westwood.

Under warm but overcast skies, more than 400 sculptors, painters, musicians and street vendors from around the country displayed their works along Westwood's crowded main avenue.

Entertainment at the show was provided by several live bands. A three-member group called Gravity gathered an enthusiastic crowd on Saturday, and found its audience clapping and cheering as the percussion player, in a solo performance quickened the rhythm and beat of his drums.

Tunes from the Renaissance period, as well as 18th-century Irish music arrangements by Joemi Wilson, could be heard in the background, and were available on records and tapes.

Some of the more unique and popular pieces of artwork at the show included a large collection of life-size papier mache dolls sculpted by Glorya and Gene Schklair from Illinois.

According to Glorya Schklair, the 5-foot-3-inch dolls are made completely with paper over a wire frame, and each doll is unique with no duplicates. One of the pieces appeared in exhibition at the Congeo Valley Art museum, she added. The dolls ranged in price from $2,000 to $3,300.

The process of marbelizing performed by Kathy and Tony Stewart was well-received at the show.

BOC approves USAC budget

Board OKs $3 million for student media, council

By Whitney Woodward
Staff Writer

BOC

The Board of Control approved budgets totaling over $3 million for undergraduate government and the student media Friday.

The $765,242 Undergraduate Students Association Budget passed without incident. However, allocations for the UC Student Association, a coalition of student governments on the nine UC campuses, and the American Indian Student Association will be determined tomorrow night by undergraduate officers.

ASUCLA Publications Director Terence Hsiao presented the $2,261,491 Communications Board Budget to BOC and answered questions about deficits run by some campus media.

Hsiao said 1987-88 was an atypically bad year for Bruin Life yearbook because of poor marketing decisions, but he projected that news promotions and reinstatement of a discount on senior portraits would increase revenue this year.

Hsiao also noted that KLA radio was responding favorably to an "aggressive" new sales staff and a D.J. troop for hire at parties.

Nearly all the remaining Comm Board media exceeded or approached their targeted revenues. Only Pacific Ties, the Asian-Pacific newspaper, did not. The Daily Bruin remained Comm Board's biggest money maker, netting $24,881 in revenues.

This year's Comm Board budget reflects reduced support from registration fees, in accordance with a plan that student media eventually become self-sufficient. The drop comes at a time when Comm Board aims to replace student publications equipment — an effort that will exhaust its capital reserves.

Plans to deplete those reserves concerned BOC Administrative Alternate Janet Gong, who suggested that Comm Board offer funding options to the committee which distributes registration fees. That way, "five years out, you're not facing an avenue of desperation."

An advertising campaign for BOC's General Electric boycott was also discussed at the meeting. Last month, the board adopted sanctions against GE for allegedly disrespecting the environment and for having ties in South Africa.

BOC reviewed an ad that will appear in the Daily Bruin Oct. 4 and 5 to inform the campus community about its decision to remove GE products from ASUCLA stores.

Two petitions against GE — one for unethical business practices, the other for covert involvement in national defense — are still scheduled for review by an ad hoc board committee.

Scientists reveal Kaposi's sarcoma not really cancer

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Scientists think Kaposi's sarcoma, a major cause of AIDS deaths, has been misunderstood for years and actually is not a form of cancer as long believed, it was reported Thursday.

The 19th century dermatologist Moritz Kaposi, who gave his name to the deadly brownish-purple lesions, was wrong, said the San Francisco Examiner, quoting a paper to appear in the October issue of Science.

"New findings suggesting that the disease has been misunderstood may lead to improved treatment for the 11,000 people" afflicted with the often fast-moving killer associated with acquired immune deficiency syndrome, the story said.

The research, led by Dr. Robert Gallo and a team at the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md., shows that the lesions are, rather than true malignancies, large clusters of blood vessels and benign cells.

"When these clusters grow inside the body, they can cause heavy bleeding and loss of normal organ function (though) they sometimes mutate and become cancerous," the story said.

The AIDS virus, called HIV, plays an indirect part in Kaposi's sarcoma by triggering the release of chemicals called growth factors, causing the cells to proliferate wildly, the report said. Gallo suspects that "pathogens . . . other than HIV may also start the disease."

Kaposi's does not always kill, the report said, because growth factors are produced in varying levels. Some cases are mild, while others are aggressive, with the difference linked to the patients immune system, genetics, drug use and other viruses.

Said Dr. Henry Mansur, deputy chief of NCI's Division of Cancer Biology: "It's very intriguing. The more we understand about how the tumor grows, the better we can intervene and stop it from growing."

Gorbachev takes presidency

Unifies top government and party jobs in USSR

By Mark J. Porubcansky
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Mikhail S. Gorbachev grasped the top government and Communist Party authority in his own hands Saturday, succeeding President Andrei A. Gromyko to climax a breathtaking two-day assault on the Kremlin's Old Guard.

The 1,500-member Supreme Soviet unanimously elected Gorbachev president just 25 hours after a hasty gathering of the Communist Party Central Committee streamlined the party apparatus and made the biggest personnel changes since Gorbachev became party leader 3½ years ago.

The Kremlin shake-up fuels Gorbachev's drive to restructure the Soviet economy and government and signals his determination to dominate the entrenched bureaucracy he blames for slowing him down.

A somber Gorbachev promised the Supreme Soviet — the nominal parliament — that governing bodies will take on a greater role in everyday management of the country while the Communist Party confines itself to policy matters.

"The Soviets (government councils) must become the highest authority on their territory and eliminate the shortcomings of stagnation," Gorbachev said. "The party will facilitate the enhancement of the role of the soviets."

"The Soviets will take on their shoulders the major burden of state work," he said in a brief address after the vote. "As the situation changes, we must change accordingly."

In its 42-minute session, the Supreme Soviet also approved without debate or dissent the selection of a new KGB chief, career officer Vladimir Kryuchkov, and Gorbachev's recommendation for a new vice president, Anatoly Lukyanov.

On Friday, Gromyko retired from the 12-man ruling Politburo. The party's policy-making

Bush, Dukakis raid other's home state

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

Michael Dukakis and George Bush raided each other's home states on Friday, Dukakis accusing his Republican rival of pursuing an agricultural policy of "the fewer farmers the better" and Bush swooping into Massachusetts to collect more endorsements from police who serve under the Democrat.

Dukakis told a farm rally in Idalou, a small community in Bush's adopted state of Texas, that the vice president "doesn't see the pain in rural America." He vowed to devote $100 million for investment in rural areas if elected.

Campaigning in Texas at a time when polls show him trailing, the Democratic presidential candidate asserted that some 250,000 farm families have left the land since Bush became vice president in 1981.

Standing in front of a cattle pen on a dusty family farm, Dukakis claimed Reagan administration farm policies had idled farmland and depressed farm prices.

"My friends, Mr. Bush's farm policy can be summed up in just five words: the fewer farmers the better," the Massachusetts governor said. "And his rural development policy can be summed up in two words: Tough luck."

Dukakis also poked fun at Bush, whose legal Texas residence is a hotel room in Houston. "Since I rented a hotel

STUDENT MEDICAL INSURANCE PLAN (MIP) SUBSCRIBERS CAN INCREASE LIFETIME BENEFIT TO $1 MILLION!

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, LOS ANGELES UCLA

BERKELEY · DAVIS · IRVINE · LOS ANGELES · RIVERSIDE · SAN DIEGO · SAN FRANCISCO · SANTA BARBARA · SANTA CRUZ

October 1988

Dear UCLA Student:

We would like to remind you of the opportunity that UCLA students have for purchasing the UCLA Student Medical Insurance Plan (MIP) along with your registration fee payment each school term (each quarter/semester).

While students have access to the services provided by the Student Health Services (SHS) on a prepaid basis, you need to protect yourself from the high cost of unexpected medical care needs that cannot be provided in SHS - such as emergency illnesses and accidents requiring hospitalization or extensive diagnostic tests. Just one day in the hospital can cost up to $1400 - not including physician and surgeon fees!.

All you need to do to purchase MIP is to add the MIP premium noted on your Registration Fee Form to your registration fee payment. MIP will provide you with medical insurance coverage up to a lifetime maximum of $100,000. We strongly urge all UCLA students to be covered under a plan that provides at least this degree of protection. It is a Regental requirement that foreign students must be protected under such a plan.

You should also know that there is a Catastrophic Supplement Plan (CSP) available to students who would like to increase their MIP benefit to $1 Million in lifetime coverage. You must first purchase MIP through the registration process to be eligible to purchase CSP. You can then purchase CSP through a separate enrollment process through the SHS Insurance Office. CSP can be renewed each term within 10 days of having purchased MIP.

The CSP premium is $110 per quarter ($165 per semester) for students, $160 per quarter ($240 per semester) for spouse, and $160 per quarter ($240 per semester) for each child. Enrollment forms can be obtained from the SHS Insurance Office located in Room A2-125, Window 4 of the Student Health Service in the UCLA Medical Center Building.

If you would like to enroll in CSP for the Fall term (and you are already enrolled in MIP for Fall), or if you have any questions or concerns regarding the program, please call the SHS Insurance Office at 213-825-1856.

Sincerely,

Linda Amicarelli

Torres to hold hearing on racism

California State Senator Art Torres will hold a public hearing on campus tomorrow to examine racial tensions at UCLA and universities nationwide.

According to Dario Frommer, Torres' press secretary, the hearing will include reports from students and faculty representing all nine University of California campuses.

The hearing will examine reasons for racial tension at universities, and will include detailed reports by UC campuses on racial incidents, Frommer said.

Torres last visited UCLA on June 1, after violence disrupted undergraduate presidential elections here.

Before his visit, students destroyed polling booths to protest the removal of president-elect Lloyd Monserratt from office after he was declared academically ineligible for the post.

At the time, some students suggested that efforts to remove Monserratt were racially and politically motivated.

Torres, a member of the California Senate Special Committee on University of California Admissions, said in a press conference about the incident last Spring, that he would "continue to hold the university accountable for the safety of its students."

The hearing will take place in the UCLA Faculty Center from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Deukmejian signs clean air bills

Motorists could pay up to $300 for smog repairs

By John Howard
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — Gov. George Deukmejian signed legislation Friday to overhaul California's anti-smog vehicle inspection program, increasing to $300 per car the amount motorists could be forced to pay for state-ordered repairs, and approved a bill toughening local anti-pollution laws.

The auto inspection bill would also extend the state's mandatory car inspection program through 1998, and expand the inspections to include government vehicles and specialized cars.

The Republican governor also signed legislation to charge people $10 a year to use state Fish and Game Department wildlife lands, and vetoed a plan to restore funds to California's worker safety program.

The governor, confronting hundreds of measures only hours from his midnight constitutional deadline to act on bills approved by the Legislature before it adjourned Sept. 1, vetoed a proposal to tighten regulations governing how sites are chosen for municipal dump sites and landfills.

And Deukmejian vetoed a measure, authored by a Los Angeles Hispanic assemblyman, to continue a federal Hispanic education program at the state level aimed at increasing health care to those who need it.

Under SB1997 by Sen. Robert Presley, D-Riverside, California motorists could be charged up to $300 for state-required repairs to make their vehicles conform with state anti-smog laws. Under

Near East exhibit spotlights ancient manuscripts, books

By Karen Oakland

Focusing on the rich diversity of the Islamic nations, a new UCLA exhibit will highlight unique materials available to the campus community. The exhibit, entitled "The Near East in UCLA Collections," will open Thursday, Oct. 6 in the University Research Library lobby.

More than 60 books, medieval manuscripts, and historic letters and photographs will be displayed, all from the UCLA library system. The Near East collection contains about 170,000 total books written in the native languages.

Items in the exhibit will include ancient writings from the history of medicine as well as 19th century photographs of city scenes and archaeological digs no longer in existence.

According to Dunning Wilson, curator of the exhibit and near eastern bibliographer for the library, one of the more outstanding pieces involves a 14th century translation by Galer of a Greek manuscript on surgical procedures into Arabic. The Greek writing was later destroyed, which makes this interpretation extremely valuable.

A major portion of the exhibit will also focus on the UCLA von Grunebaum Center for Near Eastern Studies.

Currently celebrating its 30th anniversary, the center provides many resources for individuals interested in the history and culture of the Near East. The center's audience is widespread, Wilson said, serving both regional and national areas of the United States. The center is used primarily by graduate students and faculty in Near Eastern Studies.

The exhibit was also created to coincide with the November meeting of the Middle Eastern Studies Association (MESA) in Los Angeles. MESA acts as a national director of colleges and universities with Islamic Studies programs. Its meeting at UCLA was 12 years ago.

Admission to the exhibit is free, and it will be open to the public during regular library hours, excluding holidays. It will run until January 1989.

FBI found guilty in discrimination case

Hispanic agents hope 'landmark' ruling will end nationwide bias

By Holden Lewis
Associated Press

EL PASO, Texas — Attorneys for the 311 Hispanic FBI agents who successfully sued the agency for ethnic discrimination say they hope the ruling will have a "domino effect" in rectifying bias.

"It's a landmark decision because discrimination against Hispanics in this society is pervasive," said Antonio Silva, co-counsel for the agents in the class action suit.

The other co-counsel, Hugo Rodriguez, said Friday's decision determined that the Department of Justice, of which the FBI is a part, discriminates.

"If they do, it exists in other institutions in this country," he said.

"We're hoping that it'll have a domino effect, that people will look at themselves and say, 'Let's anticipate the problem before we have it.' "

The attorneys spoke at a news conference hours after U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton issued a 95-page opinion Friday that said the FBI was guilty of "a pattern and practice of discrimination relating to conditions of employment and promotions."

Bunton said the question of damages will be dealt with later.

"Discrimination has no place in the FBI," Director William Sessions said in a written statement Friday. "I am disappointed that the court has found that Hispanic special agents have been adversely affected by the policies of the FBI."

He said the bureau is working to improve its discrimination-complaint process and a career development program, which agents must complete to rise into management.

He said the bureau will decide later whether to appeal Bunton's ruling.

Attorney General Richard Thornburgh said Friday he plans to meet with Sessions to discuss the decision.

"It obviously is of some concern, and we'll follow through on it," Thornburgh said. Neither he nor Sessions were in their current posts when the suit was filed.

Hispanic discrimination case embarrasses FBI

By Pete Yost
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A judge's finding that the FBI discriminated against its Hispanic agents is the second time in less than a year that the bureau has been embarrassed over its treatment of minority employees.

Last November, black FBI agent Donald Rochon filed a lawsuit in U.S. District Court accusing the bureau of racial harassment when he was an agent in Omaha, Neb., and Chicago. The suit is pending.

The federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission has already ruled in favor of Rochon over those allegations concerning racial mistreatment while he was in Omaha.

Increasing the hiring of minorities has been a matter of rising concern among the last two FBI directors, William Webster and William Sessions.

Webster, now CIA director, used to carry a card with him giving the latest statistics on how many minority agents the FBI had.

Recruitment of minorities and women was one of the first issues Sessions addressed after becoming director last November. He has said the FBI's makeup should reflect American society.

Currently, there are 423 Hispanic and black agents in the agency. A total of 851 agents are women, including 37 Hispanics and 65 blacks.

U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton's conclusions Friday in the Hispanics' suit address questions of advancement and treatment of Hispanics within the bureau.

Because the FBI has become a major participant in the war on drugs it needs Spanish-speaking agents.

Bunton agreed with the allegation that Hispanic agents often are called off major cases to work on lesser cases to use their Spanish-language ability, then were not given credit for their work on the cases they were taken away from.

Many other agents with training in law or accounting are placed on a fast track of promotion up through the ranks, the judge said.

Bunton said he understood the FBI needs Spanish-speaking agents because of the war on drugs, but that the need for such agents does not "justify benefit and promotion systems which do not reward Hispanic agents in a manner commensurate with their admitted contribution to the bureau."

Problems of recruitment and promotion of minorities and women were underscored last week with the resignation of Wayne G. Davis, a black who is the special agent in charge of the FBI's Philadelphia office.

He is the highest-ranking black operating in the field for the FBI and is the only black special agent in charge at any of the bureau's 58 field offices across the country.

KREMLIN: Gorbachev

Central Committee also removed another aging full member of the Politburo and two candidate, or non-voting, members and reorganized the powerful Central Committee secretariat.

Gorbachev installed supporters in key Central Committee jobs and appeared to demote Yegor K. Ligachev, said to be a conservative Politburo rival, by putting him in charge of agriculture.

The cream-colored walls of the Supreme Soviet echoed in thunderous applause at the end of the 79-year-old Gromyko's farewell address, in which he urged party unity and thanked the deputies for their faith in him.

Gromyko, a Communist Party and government stalwart from the time of Stalin through the first several years of Gorbachev's reforms, served 28 years as foreign minister before being elevated to the largely ceremonial presidency in July 1985, four months after Gorbachev took power.

"The star of socialism since October 1917 has constantly shined and given light," he said. "Thank you, comrade deputies, for the trust you've granted me in the past and now. I have very deep respect for it," he said.

Gromyko then returned to his seat on the dais facing the deputies and sat expressionless, abstaining from the vote that removed him from office.

When selected party leader in March 1985, Gorbachev chose not to take the top government job, as his predecessors had. He held a position as a member of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, the country's highest executive body that Gromyko headed. That gave Gorbachev sufficient ceremonial standing to conduct affairs of state.

But in June, the Soviet leader proposed creation of a new, more powerful presidency in line with his efforts to strengthen the government and limit the Communist Party's involvement in day-to-day management.

Gorbachev proposed that the new president be chosen by a reorganized parliament.

Communist Party officials have instructed the Supreme Soviet to make the reforms between October and next spring. It was uncertain how Gorbachev's sudden assumption of government power affected those plans.

That may become more certain at another meeting of the Supreme Soviet scheduled for the end of the month.

'Perestroika' means re-thinking defense, ex-secretaries agree

The Associated Press

While Mikhail Gorbachev shook the Kremlin by retiring President Andrei A. Gromyko, several other important developments in Soviet-U.S. relations occurred. Among them:

■ Six former secretaries of defense agreed Friday that the new openness in the Soviet Union may provide an opportunity for the United States to rethink defense strategies. But the six said any change in U.S. policy must be done from a position of strength.

Robert McNamara, Melvin Laird, Elliot Richardson, James Schlesinger, Donald Rumsfeld and Harold Brown made the remarks in a discussion moderated by television broadcaster Edwin Newman.

The forum, sponsored by the Atlanta-based Southern Center for International Studies, was taped and will be shown Nov. 6 by the Public Broadcasting Service.

It was the second time the former secretaries of defense have gathered for a discussion of foreign policy and defense issues in a forum sponsored by the Center.

■ The highest-ranking Soviet official to defect to the United States was hospitalized in fair condition Thursday after collapsing during a speech.

Arkandy N. Shevchenko, who served as undersecretary general at the United Nations for the Soviet Union from 1973 to 1978 was taken to St. Vincent's medical center after becoming ill during a talk Wednesday night at Florida Community College.

Shevchenko, 57, was admitted in critical condition suffering from intestinal bleeding, said hospital spokesman Bob Arnold. Doctors worked on Shevchenko for three hours before he was moved to the intensive care unit in fair condition. He was expected to remain in the hospital at least five days.

His defection 10 years ago was hailed by American political observers as a coup for U.S. intelligence, who had employed the diplomat as a spy from 1976 to 1978.

Shevchenko has been a U.S. citizen since February 1986 and is the author of the 1985 bestseller "Breaking with Moscow."

MONE ALLARD

UCLA's University Elementary School, currently a laboratory school run by the Graduate School of Education, has been the subject of discussions between officials from the university and the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District, who have proposed joint government of the facility.

SCHOOL: Merger talks

Solmon cited some of the possible benefits as "improving public schools, being able to work with neighborhoods and families, and having the advantages of having a lab school within a public school."

Some additional benefits, according to Solmon, include a new facility — should a merging of UES and SMMUSD take place — designed to be the "school of the 21st century. (It would be) the most modern, the most effective school for kids. Our school (UES) is great, but it was built in the 1950s."

Although a potential site has not yet been decided upon, Solmon said he hopes a "substantial amount of building would take place." There are, however, several empty schools within SMMUSD that might be considered as sites, he added.

Solmon emphasized that the UCLA-SMMUSD talks are still in the informal stage and that many problems and issues need to be resolved before any sort of action will take place. Some of these issues include preserving the "autonomy of UES and the reasonable interests of our constituents," Solmon explained.

Because the talks are fairly recent and still tentative, any real changes would occur "some time down the road . . . probably in a matter of years," Solmon said.

Chancellor Young has authorized a construction plan in which the UES buildings taken over by GSM would be rebuilt to house UES should the results of the UCLA-SMMUSD talks prove not to be beneficial to UCLA, according to Solmon. "The chancellor explicitly assured me about the reconstruction plan," Solmon added.

Benefits of the proposed merger include 'improving public schools, being able to work with neighborhoods and families, and having the advantage of having a lab school within a public school.'

UCLA Professor Christopher Donnan was called in to help examine artifacts recovered from an ancient burial site which was discovered at the foothills of Peru's Andean Mountains.

site.

"It was unbelievable," Donnan recounted. "There were elderly women and small children going over to the site with colanders and sieves and coming back with gold beads and all kinds of stuff. That was when the Peruvian archaeologists decided to set up a dig there."

Donnan said the dig yielded findings of enormous archaeological value. "This tomb went clear off the chart," he said. "We've never seen the quantity or quality of these things."

Because of his extensive experience in iconography, the study of symbolic forms, Donnan was called in to interpret the objects from the excavation after Alva and several students from the University of Trujillo uncovered the burial site.

Donnan's experience was essential to the find because the Moche had no written language and depicted their society through artistic representations, mainly on ceramic works.

Donnan determined that a Moche warrior-priest was buried in the tomb, because the inventory of objects used by such a figure, as depicted in Moche ceramic work, corresponds exactly to the objects found in the tomb.

"There is only one person depicted in Moche art who has this inventory of objects. He can't be mistaken for anyone else. There is only one person who looks like Santa Claus," he said.

In Donnan's estimation, he has excavated more than 100 Moche burial sites, "but not a single one was this rich."

One of the most exhilarating things for Donnan was actually unearthing the objects he had only seen depicted in the Moche artwork. Among them was a carved gold ceremonial rattle, gold earrings with movable pieces and other artifacts used in Moche religious ceremonies.

This miniature of a warrior, constructed of gold and turquoise and about the size of a thumb, is considered the finest single piece of jewelry yet to come from pre-Columbian America, according to archaeologist Walter Alva.

MOCHE: Artifacts

"There is a wonderment that occurs in field architecture when you look at something that hasn't been moved in 1,700 years . . . and not only . . . look at it, but also understand it," Donnan said.

"The greatest joy of it is to reconstruct the human element, to determine what an individual was doing (in the society)," he continued. "With a lot of cultures, you can't quite get close enough, but with the Moche, you have the potential to get so much closer and really perceive their world view."

The Moche civilization was extremely sophisticated and complex, according to Donnan. Their technological accomplishments included metallurgy, canal and irrigation systems and a complex agricultural system.

The objects from the excavation are currently on display at the National Geographic's Explorer's Hall in Washington D.C. In several weeks the exhibit will be returning to Peru.

Donnan said that in order to allow more people to view the exhibit, arrangements may be made with the government of Peru to allow it to tour outside of the country, but this possibility lies several years in the future.

BROCATO: Faces 20-year term

sentence. It is not known whether the victim will attend Brocato's sentencing today, or if she plans to address the court.

She was not present at Brocato's conviction last month, according to Santa Monica Outlook reporter Pat Alston, who covered the trial. However, the victim did give key testimony at a Nov. 20 municipal court preliminary hearing.

As described in the victim's Nov. 20 testimony and in police reports, the rape occurred at about 10 p.m. on Oct. 5, 1987. The victim said she was studying at a secluded desk on the third floor of URL when a man grabbed her from behind, forced her into a private reading room and raped her.

The attack, along with other rapes and assaults committed on campus last year, drew quick responses from university officials.

In separate efforts to reduce violent crimes on campus, Chancellor Charles Young and university police issued campus-wide warnings and stepped up security in and around libraries.

After investigating leads with the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department, UC police found and arrested Brocato on Oct. 22, 1987.

Brocato was convicted in county superior court Sept. 16, after a three-day trial. After 45 minutes of deliberation, a jury of two men and 10 women found him guilty of the three rape charges.

Brocato pleaded not guilty to the charges at his superior court arraignment Dec. 4. He also pleaded not guilty at his municipal court arraignment last October.

Brocato has been in custody at the Los Angeles County Jail in lieu of a $50,000 bail throughout superior court proceedings.

CRAFTS: Westwood show

Based on a 12th Century Japanese technique, marbelizing consists of the immersion of wood or ceramic figures imported from Africa, into a mixture of floating black and white paint over water. This difficult process gives objects a marble-like appearance which according to Kathy Stewart is very difficult to control.

Marbelized pieces included vases, picture frames, jewelry and small wooden animals, which ranged in price between $10 and $70.

Kids and grown-ups also had the opportunity of trying their hand at pottery painting.

One of the booths at the show sold unfinished vases which people could decorate themselves. The pot or vase was then placed in an oven or kiln where the glaze heated, giving the piece a polished appearance.

According to the artist who made the pots and provided the paints and glazing, "I sell a process rather than a product. Some people come every year to decorate their pot."

Odds and ends included the services of spiritual readers. Their fee for reading both your hands was $10 and $5 for just one hand — a dollar per finger.

The show would not have been complete without the huge soft pretzels and buttery popcorn that were sold on some street corners. Fruit juice bars as well as ice cream bars were also popular items at the show.

Lastly the Kiddie Carnival proved to be a bit disappointing according to some parents. It only featured three small prize games, and a miniature ferris wheel.

All in all, the show served as a last remnant of summer according to a passerby.

Intelligence information requested in Wright case

By Jim Drinkard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The House ethics committee formally asked the Intelligence Committee on Friday whether Speaker Jim Wright was given classified information on Central Intelligence Agency covert actions in Nicaragua.

The request signaled that the ethics panel, officially called the Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, is conducting at least an informal probe into allegations that Wright improperly disclosed classified information when he spoke openly last week about the CIA's activities.

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., the senior Republican on the Intelligence Committee, said he was "confident" the committee would cooperate with the request for information. Last week, the Democrat-controlled panel had declined to send the information to ethics, saying no official request had been made.

The ethics committee's request came as GOP members of the Intelligence Committee said they were prepared to ask the full House to investigate Wright because a previous request from the chamber's GOP leaders had fallen on deaf ears.

Democrats responded angrily, charging that the move was motivated by politics and by frustrations of Contra supporters over the perilous state of the rebels.

"I think it's mean, I think it's ugly, and I think it's beneath the dignity of the members of this House," said Rep. David Bonior, D-Mich.

But the move by the ethics committee was a signal that the Wright investigation was not being ignored, and Republicans seemed satisfied — at least for the moment.

"What was sought has been accomplished," Hyde said. "I don't see any point in airing this at this juncture . . . We are not interested in squeezing this for any political advantage. We want it dealt with."

The Intelligence and ethics committees have met to discuss the Wright matter since the speaker sparked the controversy Sept. 20.

That day, in answer to a reporter's question, Wright said he had "clear testimony from CIA people" that the spy agency had recruited agents in Nicaragua to stir up demonstrations and civil unrest that would provoke a crackdown by the leftist Sandinista government and scuttle peace talks with the Contra rebels.

Wright later elaborated, saying the information was elicited from the CIA under congressional questioning. But he subsequently denied that he had relied on any such information in making his comments, saying the agency's role in Central America was well documented in published material. And he has said he feels morally obligated to talk about any government action that is contrary to its stated support for the region's peace process.

Intro. to The Short Story

When Carla told me that my date was a little short, I thought she was talking dollars and cents, not feet and inches. So there I was at the door, in my spiked heels, staring at the top of my date's head.

All I could think was, how do I get myself out of this? I could imagine how my legs would ache if I had to walk around with my knees bent all evening.

So to stall for time, while figuring out how to fake malaria, I made us some Double Dutch Chocolate.

When I brought it into the living room, I discovered that Gary was a chocolate lover too. Ahh, a man after my own heart. Okay, I decided I'd give him a chance. So we sat down and saw each other face-to-face for the first time. He had a nice smile.

After some small talk—I mean conversation—I discovered that we both love Updike, hate the winter weather, and both have miniature schnauzers. So, we made a date to introduce Shadow and Schatzi next week.

Administration defied housing bill, judge says

By Tom Seppy
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A federal judge ruled Friday that the Reagan administration is defying a congressional mandate to release underutilized federal property as housing for the nation's homeless.

U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch said the administration's interpretation of the law ignores what he described as "the plain language" of a section of the so-called McKinney Act, "arbitrarily restricts the scope of the statute and would lead to absurd results if it were actually applied."

Gasch said the law, named after the late Rep. Stewart B. McKinney, D-Conn., who died a few months after it was enacted in 1987, "is designed to make surplus federal property available to assist the homeless."

Agreeing with the National Coalition for the Homeless, he said only 12 facilities have been identified as underutilized by the Veterans Administration, the Defense Department and the General Services Administration and only two have been made available to the homeless.

Department of Housing and Urban Development spokesman Bob Nipp said the decision will require the agency to review surveys of surplus buildings conducted by the Veterans Administration, the Defense Department, the General Services Administration and the Department of Health and Human Services to determine which are suitable for housing.

HUD general counsel J. Michael Dorsey said he did not know how many properties would be involved. He said the order, however, does not apply to single-unit dwellings taken over by HUD and the Veterans Administration because of defaults on government-backed housing loans.

Sales of HUD houses will continue, said Dorsey who described the decision as generally positive because it could help identify additional buildings that might be used for the homeless.

"The order directs us to do more in more detail than we thought we had done in substantial compliance with the law," he said.

Pope upholds that priesthood is only for men

By Mary Beth Sheridan
Associated Press

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II on Friday ruled out the priesthood for women but condemned sexual discrimination in a major teaching that will shape the doctrine on women in the Roman Catholic Church.

"Mulieris Dignitatem," Latin for "On the Dignity of Women," attempts to define women's nature and role in the church and society.

The document concludes that men and women are equal but fundamentally different and thus play different roles. Women, it says, are formed by maternal qualities.

John Paul says women who choose celibacy as a vocation, room in Dallas last night, I guess I qualify as a Texan," Dukakis said.

Bush, meanwhile, made the second raid of Dukakis' home turf in a week to pick up police endorsements. Eight days after he won the backing of the Boston Police Patrolman's Association, the vice president on Friday made a hasty schedule change to accept the endorsement in Springfield, Mass., of two municipal police unions.

Bush told them the Massachusetts prison furlough program was "a national disgrace."

Speaking earlier in Paterson, N.J., where he also received police endorsements, Bush accused Dukakis of having a "revolving door program for murderers who have not even served enough time for parole."

The two references were to a favorite Bush target: a furlough program that allowed passes for first-degree murderers. The program was later amended, but not until after one of the prisoners escaped while on furlough and raped a Maryland woman.

Dukakis supporters sought to counter Bush's latest endorsements with a news conference in Hartford, Mass., where the Hartford Police Union endorsed Dukakis.

Yet more national polls weighed in with tossup results. A Gallup survey of 1,020 registered voters indicated Bush was the choice of 47 percent, Dukakis 42 percent. The survey, conducted Tuesday and Wednesday, had a 3 percent margin of error.

A Los Angeles Times poll conducted by caggn8$back voters who had been interviewed just before and then just after the Sunday's presidential debate found the race still a tie, at 45-45 percent. It had been 46-46 Sunday.

The new callback poll, conducted Thursday, had 622 respondents and a five-point margin of error.

President Reagan, meanwhile, took a cue from Bush's attacks on Dukakis for his membership in the American Civil Liberties Union, portraying the Democratic contender as "liberal, liberal, liberal."

Speaking to an dience of 1,200 at a Polish social hall in southwest Chicago, the president suggested that Dukakis' performance in last Sunday's debate was "just like an ACLU member: he didn't have a prayer when he needed one."

Questioning the positions of the ACLU, Reagan added, "You recall a few years back, political figures had to disassociate themselves from groups on the right with far-out views. Isn't it now time for responsible people to do the same thing with far-out groups on the left?"

Just days before the nationally-televised vice presidential debate in Omaha, Neb., Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said Bush's "record on education is as empty as Dan Quayle's resume."

Before heading to Washington, D.C., to claim the endorsement, Bentsen told a rally in Charlotte, N.C., that the Democratic ticket stood for a strong national defense and was "ready to pay the price to defend freedom."

Quayle took time out from his debate preparation to tour to Philadelphia for a fund-raiser and firehouse exposition. Aides said he spent the morning in question-and-answer sessions with his staff and on Saturday would hold a mock debate with Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore.

current law, motorists can be forced to pay up to $50 to make needed repairs.

Presley's measure would replace the $50 fee with a sliding scale of charges, from $50 for 1971 and older cars to $300 for 1990 vehicles. His bill would also expand manufacturers' warranties to cover all emissions equipment for three years or 50,000 miles beginning in 1990.

Deukmejian also signed AB2595 by Assemblyman Byron Sher, D-Palo Alto, which would give local authorities the power to toughen anti-pollution penalties and increase state and local fees. It also requires the state Air Resources Board to review the air basins that have not met air-quality standards, and require local districts to cut emissions by at least 5 percent annually until they meet the safety standards.

The wildlife bill, AB3873 by Assemblyman Jim Costa, D-Fresno, would allow the Fish and Game Department to charge the public daily or annual fees to use the bulk of the approximately 400,000 acres of land under the department's jurisdiction.

Under Costa's bill, which takes effect Jan. 1, visitors to wildlife areas would pay $10 a year, or $2 for a one-day visit. The fees would be increased to adjust for inflation.

Deukmejian, in a move that came as no surprise, vetoed AB867 by Assemblyman Dick Floyd, D-Hawthorne, which would have restored some $8.9 million in state funding for the Cal-OSHA worker safety program.

Deukmejian also vetoed AB3012 by Assemblyman Richard Katz, D-Sepulveda, which would have tightened the controls governing the placement of municipal dumps and landfills, and would have required special buffer zones to be established around the sites.

such as nuns, accept a "spiritual motherhood."

While highly theoretical, the document provides a framework for specific issues the church is expected to tackle in coming years, such as the positions and influence women can have in the church structure.

The ban on women priests and deacons has been a source of considerable tension between the Vatican and Catholics in the United States and western Europe.

The 120-page document is an apostolic letter, which means it will be presented to Roman Catholics as church teaching but is not an infallible pronouncement.

Vatican officials said the document expresses the pope's beliefs shaped by years of reflection on the subject of women, but did not involve scientists or other outside experts.

Much of the document consists of a strong defense of women's equality with men and praise for their contributions. The pope equates sexual discrimination and domination over women with sin and condemns men who fail to take responsibility for their sexual acts.

Teachers

the College of Letters and Science.

Studies estimate that the nation will need at least a million new school teachers by the 1990s. Yet because few students are entering the profession, experts predict a shortage of teachers and, conversely, enormous opportunities for people interested in teaching. Edward "Chip" Anderson, co-director of the program, described the situation as "desperate."

To make teaching more attractive, UCLA will emphasize the profession's importance, Lara said. "Teaching has to be right there with medicine, law, urban planning, dentistry and journalism. Teaching as a university professor or a first grade teacher really is an alternative."

When talented people are turned away, "youths in this state are going to be shortchanged," Lara said. For students to aspire to attend the university, they need teachers familiar with its stringent requirements. Lara warned that UCLA must actively recruit teachers, lest California schools "be staffed by people who come from state colleges and other institutions, and who are not going to share the same intellectual values that students experience in the University of California."

plans.

He stressed that he always welcomes input from students and staff.

The change was the result of discussions last year about the direction of the program, Lara said. Placing the responsibility of the program in the assistant provost's office has always been a temporary arrangement, he added.

Lara will remain the assistant provost of the college and assistant dean of the Graduate School of Education. He will also initiate a new program to recruit teachers.

When asked if he was relieved to leave a controversial program where he has often been the object of protests, Lara would not comment, but said students may now protest him for "abandoning" the program.

Strange things can happen when school starts on a Thursday

Harold Rhosen

I had enough problems with the Hell Trip to the East last summer, so I decided to hang around/ do nothing/ work/ help people move/ shlep friends to and from the airport/ do nothing/ sleep/ spend money/ do nothing all summer. After such a mentally exhausting summer, I really looked forward to the beginning of yet another action-packed school year.

No, this won't be another "Listen to what I did this summer!" column. This is more like a "Listen to what happened to me on my first day back!" column.

So here I am, at school heading towards the computer room to see if I have moved up from 88th on the waiting list in a class with a capacity of about 50. I've been here long enough to know that I'll have to get in line, get a ticket, go away, get in line, wait inside, get in line, go into the computer room, wait in line, find out no relevant information, leave. I'm prepared for a long day. Taken all my stress tabs.

I get my ticket and then set about doing millions of meaningless other chores, such as hopelessly trying to find a professor, buying new-fangled notebooks, and wasting time. I had about a two-hour wait until my number would allow me to see the computer.

I was just plain excited to be back on campus and having the opportunity to redeem myself for my horrendous Spring quarter. I decided now was the perfect time to have that rite of Fall — the first meal back.

I headed over to Campus Corner to say hello to an old favorite, the Cobb Salad sandwich, on a pita!, with mayo, not Italian. For the first time in my life I ordered the sandwich correctly, remembering to say "with mayo" before she had to ask, "mayonnaise or Italian?" Life was good.

I walked around to the pick up window and added some fries and a large Coke to my order. The fries were what I expected, those crisp, golden brown, ice-cold kind that ASUCLA prepares so well. The Coke, however, was not in the really large cup, as I had thought it would be, but in more of a medium sized cup. Oh well.

Took a sip of the coke, but it was only Coke syrup, or something, none of that good ol' life-threatening, gas-causing carbonation that I drink it for. So, I had to order something else. I made it a root beer. "In one of those really large cups this time, please."

"Oh, you mean Jumbo." I guess I'm just not up on current soda terminology.

I sat down and had a fry. Really cold. The root beer was flat, too. I had to go back in line.

So, not only did they have to change the carbon dioxide canister, but the friendly supervisor had to show anyone within walking distance how to do it. "Now, you turn the handle like this. Get the monkey wrench, turn counter-clockwise . . . " The fries were getting colder.

Almost done. "What did you want?"

"Jumbo coke."

"Diet?"

What did he mean by that?

"No."

I looked over to my food. A bird jumped on the table, looked around, hopped up to my plate, grabbed an entire french fry, took off. He kept circling my table, showing off to all of his little bird buddies, "Look I got an entire fry from this guy!"

I went over and covered up my food, so his buddies didn't get any ideas. He flew by a couple of times to tease me. Went back to get my drink. A line had formed.

"What'd you want again?"

"Coke."

"Jumbo, right? Diet?"

"NO!"

I finally settled down, still calm, with my first meal back and figured all in all, everything was okay. The Cobb Salad had Italian.

Once inside the computer room I invariably had to leave my line to move to one which looked much shorter. Never do that.

The girl at the front was of the genre of self-centered, oblivious-to-the-rest-of-the-world people who took out the entire schedule of classes, which, by the way, was intended to be read at home, or while in line, or while sitting — anywhere but when you're at the front of my line. She started switching majors right at the terminal, I think. She looked up course ID numbers for Peruvian Baby Washing, Mating Habits of the Arizona Mongoose, and Military Science: How to Win Friends and Kill Them. I almost peed in my pants.

When I finally got up to the front, the girl assured me she enrolled me in the only open discussion section for a class. Great, something good happened. Now I know why they tell you to check your printout before you leave. She was an idiot, and I was about fifth on the waiting list for a class of 23. Thanks.

Got back in line. A different one. I think that other girl's brother was in the front of this one.

When I finally got to the front, I told the woman what had happened, and what I wanted to do. "Reg card, please."

"Oh, I'm not actually enrolled here," I said. Wasn't funny.

After I assured her I was only joking, and she still didn't believe me, she asked me for my enrollment appointment slip. I couldn't believe it. She wouldn't budge.

So I searched through my bags of books, papers, notes, assorted paraphernalia, and finally found it. "How do I know this is real?"

Was this a dream? I started thinking about all the people who absolutely cannot find work in this city.

She finally agreed to the validity of the paper. However, explaining to this woman that all I wanted to do was to find an open discussion section was quite another story.

"What do you want to do?"

"Just find an open discussion section and get into it."

"For what class?"

"This one."

"But you're in it!"

"I'm on the waiting list. I want to be enrolled."

"In what class?"

It went on and on. People behind me weren't so sympathetic. Just pathetic.

I really hope my first day back was not a foreshadowing of the rest of the year. I guess it won't be. You rarely run into such snafus within this finely-tuned precise machine known as UCLA. Bullshit. ■

Understanding the 'reasoning' behind a Bush-bashing column

By Lawrence Lee

It's an open secret that a handful of us veteran Viewpoint readers can look at an article and determine the author's thought process in producing it. Hence, I now submit a reconstruction of Michael Katz's thoughts during the birth of his carefully entitled article, "Yo, George Bush!" (Bruin, Registration Issue).

Hmm, the election's coming up. Let the Bush-bashing begin!

Nuclear arms. Yeah, that's good. Americans are scared to death of nuclear arms. Even though balance of power helps us to negotiate effectively with the Soviets, the American public will never support a nuclear build-up of any kind.

Oh yeah, there was also that Pearl Harbor mix-up. Sure, Dukakis makes up words like "cockamamie," but that's not nearly as bad as getting dates mixed up. Besides, "cockamamie" might be an actual Greek word. I wonder if that's the correct spelling.

And Bush's running mate, Dan Quayle, took a lot of heat too, but I guess further investigation revealed that even a truck driver was let into the Indiana National Guard ahead of him. Oh well, I'll label him a draft-dodger anyway, since Americans harbor an instinctive grudge against the affluent. Along the same lines, if a person has the gall to earn over $120,000 a year, it serves him right to get about half of his income taxed away. Hooray, Dukakis!

Let's see, what else can I say? Oh, I can link Bush to that federal tax break to businesses. It was completely unfair. It sure backfired on Reagan, though. Remember that tax break he gave to high-technology companies willing to expand? These companies wanted the best employees for their industry, so they set up new projects in Massachusetts near M.I.T. and Harvard. The state employment rate went up and my man Dukakis was sitting pretty. Wait a second, that tax break created lots of new jobs, so maybe it wasn't so bad after all. And maybe Reagan should get some credit. Nah, stop confusing yourself. Dukakis deserves the credit because he's a Democrat. Those dirty Republicans probably never intended to create any new jobs anyway. I heard that it's not in their nature to do that sort of thing.

Hmm, what else is there? Ah, the gender gap. Who's Bush trying to kid? It's the 1980's for God's sake. Everybody knows that; no one has morals anymore. I'll bet Bush opposes abortion because he wants to force women to have children, and then stay at home to care for them. Just watch, if he's elected he'll try to enact a law against adoptions, too, so women will be stuck with their unwanted children. Bush doesn't understand. Kids and birth control are a major drag. Heck what does Bush know, he probably has sex with Reagan. Hey, that'll be a neat thing to say. I'll include that. Yeah, that's probably true, too. I mean, why else would he be so loyal?

Now, where was I? Oh, gender gap. Yeah, all those Republicans are the same. They just want to keep women at home — I remember reading that in The New Republic. Hey, I don't care if Dukakis' running mate, Lloyd Bensten, mistakenly called the Equal Rights Amendment the "REA" during a rally in late July. Bush has to be more sexist because he's Republican.

And then there's the economy. Let's see, Reagan took us through a depression, or was it a recession? Gosh, all these technical terms. I'll say depression just because it sounds gloomier. In any case, I was depressed rather frequently during the last seven years. Yeah, that's the clincher, it had to be a depression.

The amazing unbelief of so-called believers

By Michael Snead

Living in a "Christian" nation, I am continuously amazed at out countrymen's lack of knowledge or belief in the Bible. I am amazed at how easy it is for people to believe the hearsay of others, the generic horoscopes of the zodiac, the fortune tales of crystal balls, the blind predictions of false prophets, but not the testimony of the Word of God.

For example, last May Sproul Hall had 20 people sleep on its front lawn because students were afraid to sleep in their dorm room the night of Nostradamus' infamous earthquake prediction. People around the city were in fear for their lives on May 10, and the prediction was the talk of the town. Yet how many people actually read the prediction by Nostradamus? I would speculate just a handful. Most of us heard it through the grapevine. How many people took the time to look up and double check the accuracy of his predictions? I would surmise even a smaller handful. But how many people were genuinely worried that day? Concerned? Open to the possibility? Or even talked about it? This time I would speculate the vast majority of us. And what happened? Nothing! The earthquake never came. Nostradamus' prediction, as well as our own blind ignorance, once again demonstrated the folly and fallibility of man.

And yet, when the Bible predicted the rise and fall of the Babylonian, Medo-Persian, Greek and Roman empires hundreds of years before they happened, everyone still refuses to acknowledge it. But there it is, folks, written in black and white (Daniel 5, 8). Bible prophecy has been 100 percent accurate thus far and, contrary to the popular belief, can be very specific.

Other examples include Jesus' prediction of the fall of Jerusalem and its temple's destruction (Matthew 24) well before the city was leveled by Roman soldiers in 70 A.D. He then prophesied that the Jews

'BELIEVERS': Actions speak louder than words

would be gathered together once again from around the world to form a nation, and Jerusalem would be freed from Gentile control (Matthew 24:32-34, Psalm 102:13, Luke 21:24). In 1948, Israel once again became a nation, and in 1967 Jerusalem (for the first time since 70 A.D.) was freed from Gentile dominion. With 1,500 pages of fact, prophecy and teachings that are 100 percent reliable and authoritative, it amazes me that people don't even open it up to find out what it says. It amazes me that people pass the Bible off as contradictory, flawed, or out-dated without even reading it for themselves! This fact is even more amazing in light of our country's attitude which supposes no one is guilty until after a fair and just trial. With such eternally important consequences, can your afford not to give the Bible a fair and honest try for yourself?

Another situation that astonishes me is that people are willing to believe in God, but not in His Bible. To illustrate the hypocrisy of what this represents, let me ask you a question. Do you remember your coach telling you, "Joe Bruin, if you're going to play the game, you've got to play by the rules." Why did he say that? Because, he knows if we make up our own rules as we're playing the game, it would lead to total chaos and destruction of the game. People would get hurt. For example, what would happen if you're playing baseball and you're running in to score the winning run and, all of the sudden, the catcher decides to play foot ball and tackles you as you are sliding into home plate? Or, how about hockey players deciding to hit their opponents in the knees or groin area with their stick and skates? It would be destructive and chaotic. Simply dangerous. This is why, if you're going to play the game, you've got to play by the rules.

The same situation applies to the game of life. How many people believe in the Creator of life, God, but don't believe in His rules as stated in the Bible. Again, how many people believe in God, believe that He loves them, believe in Heaven but don't follow the Bible, God's Word, to abstain from premarital sex, homosexuality, lying, stealing, jealousy or other sins. People, what good are your beliefs when they don't even motivate you to act on them? We all know that actions speak louder than words. So, consequently, don't hypocritical actions show the hollowness of your faith? This double standard cannot be justified. It's as ludicrous as playing the game without using the rules. Like the above examples, there's a reason for abiding by the rules, and that is to prevent people from great emotional, physical and spiritual injury. If you deny the authority of the Bible, then you deny the very Authority who wrote it — God. The two are inseparable.

Even if you discount any part of the Bible, you immediately void any belief in God. Why? Because, in essence, you are telling yourself that, yes, you acknowledge God is wise enough to create everything you see — the universe, the earth, the ecosystem, and even you, but then He was not wise enough to get His own book right. Or, you acknowledge that God was wise enough to make billions and trillions of calculations but wasn't able accurately to keep a little 1,500 page diary of it all. Come on, people, think about it! If God is wise enough to make all of creation, my friends, he is certainly wise enough to get His own owner's manual right.

Thus, if God says, "Do not be deceived, neither the sexually immoral, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor male prostitutes, nor homosexual offenders, nor thieves, nor the greedy, nor drunkards, nor slanderers, nor swindlers will inherit the kingdom of God (1 Corinthians 6:9-10)," He means it! And just in case this didn't sink in, there are many other verses just like it. Another example in 1 Thessalonians 4:3-6 says, "This is the will of God that you should avoid sexual immorality, that each of you should control his own body in a way that is holy and honorable, not in passionate lust like the heathen, who do not know God; and that in this matter no one should wrong his brother or take advantage of him. The Lord will punish men for all such sins." If you still doubt God's position on sin or you fear that I have taken this verse out of context and it doesn't really mean what it says, then I exhort you to read the entire Bible for yourself or go to a Bible study to get the full picture. Though it was written over a 1,500-year period in three different languages (Hebrew, Greek and Aramaic) and contains 66 books, it reads as One voice.

And for those of you who are afraid to read the Bible because of what it may say, I caution you not to keep yourself in ignorance much longer. Ignorance of God's law (and salvation!) will not save you in the day of God's judgment. Unfair, you say? No, not really. In the United States, we too are unable to claim ignorance in a court of law. For example, if we are to take upon ourselves the privilege of driving a car, then it is up to us to be responsible for knowing all of the laws relating to it. Why? Because laws are designed to insure everyone's safety and security. No one should have to suffer bodily harm or property damage because of someone's carelessness, lack of concern or ignorance. Ignorance is sin! Likewise, if you're going to live on this planet, to live and deal with people, to live and deal with God, you must learn to live and deal with His laws. Completely. Why? Because like a drunk driver losing control of his car, sin kills, injures and maims.

And if you think that sin is no big deal, do not be deceived. Just because most of the campus, the country and the world indulges in it, do not revel in the "safety" of numbers. Just because "everybody does it" does not make it right, nor is God pressured into saving you all.

In conclusion, I'd like to finish with this: whether or not you believe in God is not the issue. The fact that He exists is. So, for those who don't believe in Him, I encourage you to seek Him with all your heart until you find Him! And if you do believe in Him, be careful. Do not be deceived or fooled into thinking your idle belief in god or his love will save you from your sins. There is grace and salvation, but it doesn't come cheap. It requires commitment. A life-changing commitment to holiness and purity as well as a life-long belief in your salvation through His Son, Jesus Christ.

In all likelihood, there have been times in your life when you've read something that just about drove you crazy. Maybe it was something someone gave you on Bruin Walk. Or maybe it was part of the assigned reading for a class. In fact, it might've even been an article in the Bruin.

As long as there's Bruin viewpoint, though, you have a potential recourse (even if it was an article in our section that annoyed you in the first place).

Our pages are largely filled with letters, viewpoints and counterpoints from students much like yourself, who — remembering to include their name, year, major and phone number — turned their submissions into the box on the receptionists' desk in 112 Kerckhoff Hall.

Stars of 'L.A. LAW' support Proposition 95

Dey, Hamlin, Smits lend faces to downtown affair

By Kevin J. Messick
Off-Campus Editor

Principal cast members from the Emmy Award-winning television series L.A. LAW joined real Los Angeles lawyers at a downtown cocktail reception fundraiser last Thursday in support of Proposition 95 — the Hunger and Homeless Funding Initiative.

Prop. 95 is a statewide ballot measure which hopes to raise as much as $90 million annually for housing, food and job-training programs by imposing new fines (similar to a traffic ticket) on health, safety and building code violators.

"Proposition 95 is a worry-free initiative for voters. It takes care of itself," said L.A. LAW's Susan Dey, the spokesperson for the event. While addressing a crowd of prominent Southland attorneys, Dey — accompanied by fellow TV lawyers Harry Hamlin, Jimmy Smits and Blair Underwood — stressed the initiative's statewide approach to dealing with the problems of homelessness and hunger without using tax dollars.

Along with revenues from the violations, funds will also be provided by the creation of a California Savings Bond issued in small denominations of $100 or less to finance the short-fall of low-income housing in California.

Board of Equalization member Conway Collis, a leading backer of the measure, told those attending the reception that Prop. 95 is the first comprehensive approach to these problems yet proposed anywhere in the country. "We'll let the slum lords and restaurant owners who endanger our health pay for the problems for the hunger and homelessness," said Collis.

In a recent Los Angeles Times article (9/8/88) reviewing Prop. 95, Gene Boutilier, homeless coordinator for the Los Angeles United Way, said L.A.'s minimum share of the projected funds under Prop. 95 is more than that now supplied to the area under all state and federal homeless programs combined.

As for voter support, the Times article documented a recent California Poll in which 70 percent of those asked said they supported the measure, while 18 percent were opposed and 12 percent were undecided.

Prop. 95 was the first initiative to make its way onto the November ballot after an aggressive signature-gathering campaign. Main opposition to the initiative has come from building owners, restaurant owners and grocery trade associations, which object to being singled out to shoulder a burden that affects all of society.

Dey and the other L.A. LAW cast members continued taking their message to voters later that evening, where they were joined by actor Jon Voight in a similar reception on the Westside.

Danny (River Phoenix) reveals his true identity to Lorna (Martha Plimpton) in 'Running on Empty.'

River Phoenix comes of age in hit film 'Running on Empty'

By Kevin J. Messick
Off-Campus Editor

It is the morning after Amnesty's "Human Rights Now" Los Angeles concert, and River Phoenix's voice is still a little hoarse from the late night at te Coliseum. Clad in neatly pressed khaki pants and white shirt, his matted hair and tired eyes are more telling of his true state. Empty fruit juice and Evian bottles are scattered across the dresser, while XTC blares from a portable cassette deck in his Beverly Hills hotel room.

"I thought it was a really good concert. A lot of great energy," he said of the previous night's show. "Witnessing something like that, seeing all those people together . . . It's securing a foundation that really needs to be worked out.

"It (human rights) shouldn't be said anymore, it should be unsaid. People should just have their rights." He is sincere about the concert's message, and his eyes begin to light up as he continues to speak. "What's really exciting about it, is that in the future, it will extend itself to the whole planet, all living things, which would really be perfection I guess."

Not a very typical answer for an 18-year-old boy, but then again River Phoenix is no typical teenager. The eldest of five children, River began his professional career at age five, singing on street corners with his three-year-old sister Rainbow in Caracas, Venezuela. When he was almost eight, his family moved back to the States and started from scratch — "we've started from scratch a few times," River admits. "Jesus, two years ago we started from scratch."

The Phoenix family relocated again when he was 10, this time to Los Angeles, where River and Rainbow, now accompanied by siblings Liberty, Leaf, and Summer, continued to perform on the streets. In fact, River remembers singing, dancing and playing guitar in Westwood, next to UCLA. He explained that it was the Phoenix

Columbus, Elvis meet at 'Heartbreak Hotel'

By Kevin J. Messick, Off-campus Editor

"This film's based upon a conversation I wanted to have with Elvis years ago," said writer-director Chris Columbus about his latest film Heartbreak Hotel. I just wanted to know why he turned his back on rock 'n' roll, and I wanted to make a film about it."

Set in 1972, Heartbreak Hotel (which opened Friday) tells the tale of Johnny Wolfe (Charlie Schlatter), who in a last-ditch effort to brighten the life of his depressed mother, kidnaps the King of Rock 'n' Roll (David Keith) and brings him to their small town in Ohio.

'Heartbreak Hotel' writer-director Chris Columbus.

Previously, Columbus (who just turned 30) had a remarkably fast career in becoming a successful screenwriter (Gremlins, Goonies and Young Sherlock Holmes) before making his directorial debut with 1987's Adventures in Babysitting. But as the writer/director of Heartbreak Hotel, he combines both of his talents for the first time in this musical-fantasy-drama.

"It's a film about the good side of Elvis Presley, the fact that he's the King of Rock 'n' Roll," said die-hard Elvis fan Columbus, "and no one else could have fit into the picture. These kids couldn't have kidnapped Springsteen, or kidnapped Mick Jagger. It only works in 1972 with Elvis Presley. We're not trying to cash in on anything or market anything, we're just making people try to see Elvis as the King of Rock 'n' Roll again."

Directing is something Columbus says he wanted to do from the outset of his enrollment at New York University's film school. "I really wanted to direct films. It's been my life-long ambition of 10 years. In this pursuit, Columbus started writing feature scripts as a sophomore because "I was just told the quickest way to become a director was to become a writer."

With the help of an NYU screenwriting professor, Columbus was hooked up with CAA agent Jack Rapke, who pushed his first screenplays to the various studios. The connection paid off. After graduation, Columbus' first three screenplays were produced by Steven Spielberg.

"Jack just sent the script because he had heard Spielberg was looking for some stuff," said Columbus. "I know it was on a pile of reading material that Spielberg had, and he just picked it up and read it over the weekend." Soon after, Gremlins became Columbus' first Hollywood screenwriting credit.

Columbus explains that his years with Spielberg were like "Graduate filmmaking school. I mean I learned a lot about directing even though I only worked with him as a writer. I had a chance to visit the sets of the films I worked on and really just get a feel for the movies that I eventually wanted to make, and realize that it's a lot

John Lennon: finally a star!

By Jim Pickrell
Staff Writer

Alright! John Lennon finally got his star. The Hollywood Chamber of Commerce, backed by Columbia records, the producers of Imagine (the new documentary on Lennon's life), and local radio station KNX 93.1 FM, made it official by planting a star for John Lennon last Friday morning on the dreaded "Walk of Fame" in front of the Columbia Records office near Hollywood and Vine.

It certainly was a media event. All the local TV stations were there, as well as national and international press, hundreds of them milling around, bimbo interviewers, MTV DJ's, lost-looking Australians from their Channel 10 Network, and a polite guy from NHK TV, (Japan), who kept trying to ask questions but wasn't tall enough or loud enough to shout his way through the rest of the press who were acting like a bunch of groupies themselves.

Hundreds of them were there for Yoko Ono and David Wolper's press conference at 10 a.m. before the big unveiling, with rows of cameramen lined up like machine-gunners in the trenches.

After the press conference, there was a two-hour wait before the big ceremony outside. Gradually tension began to build. Even the press were forced to wait and push and

Sordid 'Dead Ringers' falters despite Irons

By I. Nordstrom, Staff Writer

■ FILM: Dead Ringers. A Morgan Creek Productions. Presented by James G. Robinson and Joe Roth. Director David Cronenberg. Screenplay by Cronenberg and Norman Snider. Distributed by Twentieth Century Fox.

Like a story by Edgar Allan Poe, Dead Ringers sets a foreboding mood and unfolds with slow precision as it traces the bizarre relationship between two pathologically inter-dependent twins. But director David Cronenberg's new psychological thriller falters, leaving gaps in the personalities that Poe would plumb.

Explorations of strange, slightly sordid relationships between twins are nearly a genre unto themselves. Dead Ringers, because it skims instead of dissecting, does not expand upon the well-worn premise.

This flimsy storyline aspires to examine twin psyches: twin gynecologists (well, THAT does break new cinematic ground), while happy having such a nifty job where they're sure to meet chicks, have an odd, possessive relationship. When the timid twin (Beverly) falls for a steamy actress (Claire), the racy twin (Elliot) gets jealous, and the peaceful symbiosis between the brothers deteriorates. The timid one, in anguish, gets hooked on diet pills (DIET PILLS?) and goes nuts; creating perverse gynecological instruments (!), he precipitates the destruction of both twins.

Would Dexatrim crumble the House of Usher? Dead Ringers emphasizes external factors — drugs — at the expense of internal motivations. This is a surprising failing from Cronenberg, the man who brought us The Fly, and kept introspection centerstage in a similar story of self-destruction.

Jeremy Irons stars as twin brothers Elliot and Beverly Mantle, and meets the considerable challenge of portraying the twins as interesting and distinct individuals. He shows us Elliot's smooth schmooz-

Reginald Dwight, a.k.a. Elton John, at the Hollywood Bowl.

JONATHAN WHITAKER

Elton John's lackluster return

By Marlene Casillas
Staff Writer

■ CONCERT: Elton John. At the Hollywood Bowl. September 25, 1988.

The Elton John concert on Sunday Sept. 25, the last of three sold-out performances at the Hollywood Bowl, was a case of double identity. As the show opened, custom-blinds — imprinted with the cover of John's latest album — accidentally crashed down revealing a man named Reginald Dwight (John's real name).

Poised at the piano, centerstage, Dwight resembled Elton John, but something was missing. A basic-blue suit replaced the typical, flamboyant costumes. A simple dark pair of glasses replaced his usual lavish eyewear.

The Reg Strikes Back concert tour epitomizes John's recent attempt to create a fresh image. Although he has auctioned his bizarre collection of sunglasses — in shapes ranging from Mickey Mouse heads to American flags — and his outrageously decorative wardrobe (including the oversized, 54 inch-platform boots), the musician at the piano was still the same ol' Elton.

However, when the familiar pop-singer shed the Elton-skin and metamorphosed into Dwight, an energetic stage-performer died. The concert was a mix of satisfaction and dissatisfaction.

children who wanted to perform — especially at Christmas time. "It's funny, I still meet people today that remember us from way back when."

Today, most people don't remember River from his Westwood sidewalk performances, but they do recognize the handsome young actor from his roles in such films as Rob Reiner's Stand By Me, Peter Weir's The Mosquito Coast, and his most recent role in Sidney Lumet's critically acclaimed Running on Empty.

'Running on Empty'

River is receiving rave reviews for his performance in Running on Empty, a movie concerning a family on the run. The film chronicles the lives of the Popes (Judd Hirsch and Christine Lahti), former '60s radicals who helped bomb a government-funded napalm laboratory, and unintentionally critically injured a janitor inside. They found themselves on the FBI's 10 most wanted list, and knowing they would lose custody of their two-year-old son Danny if they surrendered to the authorities, the Popes became fugitives, living "underground" in order to keep the family together.

Fifteen years later, Danny (River's role) is 17 and has a 10-year-old brother. The Popes have sacrificed a normal life for their political beliefs. But Danny sees a way to stop running. He has a choice to develop his skills as a talented musician, as well as developing his relationship with Lorna (Martha Plimpton).

Phoenix, Christine Lahti, Judd Hirsch, Jonas Abry from film 'Running on Empty.'

Danny's ultimate choice is life on the run or life on his own. "My character is definitely a victim of circumstance," says River. "He's very oppressed by his lifestyle, he has trouble being honest with others, and in fact is supposed to not be honest — to live a lie, basically."

This role is not only a coming-of-age transition for the character of Danny Pope, but also marks River's cinematic coming-of-age, as he breaks away from the course taken by other child stars who try to reach too far, too fast, often ending up falling flat on the screen. "There was one lame attempt, but that didn't really work out," he admits about the film A Night in the Life of Jimmy Reardon. "A poor decision on my part, because I wasn't quite mature enough to play the part. So therefore it was ings and Beverly's book worm retreats from society and, to some degree, illuminates the brothers' emotional bond.

Unfortunately, Cronenberg's direction and the script he co-wrote with Norman Snider stress the chaos of Beverly's breakdown before fully exploring the relationship between the brothers and the equally crucial role of Claire (Genevieve Bujold).

Claire's role is especially ambiguous. She, who unhinges Bev and so threatens Elliot, remains in the background, the seductress with a cameo role. She announces she loves Bev and we can't help but wonder why, since we don't see the two together in more than a few scenes.

The characters' sexuality — Claire's masochism, Elliot's promiscuity, Bev's uncertainty, as well as the brothers "sharing" of women — are the keys to their identities, but Cronenberg does not explore the potentially volatile interplay between them. His hints at the homoerotic, possibly incestuous relationship of the twins, the brothers' femininity ("Why did your mother give you a woman's name?" Claire asks Bev; Elliot is called Ellie by his friends), Bev's sick preoccupation with creating surgical tools for work on "mutant women," and the image of Claire biting a membranous cord that binds Siamese twins provide the film's best moments; by confronting the characters' sexual identities, they reveal important motivations, desires, and fears, and steady the foundation of Cronenberg's underdeveloped film.

Dead Ringers is suspenseful and very well acted, but not involving. Failing to fully explore its characters, it falls short as a psychological thriller.

more fun to write special-effects movies than it is to direct them. I found that I love working with actors, and to me that was the key."

Columbus was scheduled to make his directorial debut for Spielberg on an Amazing Stories episode, but Adventures in Babysitting arose to take that honor. Adventures was successful at the box office and on home-video, but Columbus' memory of the film is still tainted with the flak that was generated over the supposedly racist overtones of the film.

"I was horrified when people though Adventures was racist," said Columbus. "I think it started with Gary Franklin. I have never respected him as a critic anyway, and I just don't think he deserves to be making film criticism. I think everybody in the whole world feels the same way about the guy. I wish there was a version of disbarring, because I'd like to have him disbarred."

As for his young start in the business, Columbus likes to draw a parallel between film and rock 'n' roll. "I just feel it's the same sort of creative situation, because various rock 'n' rollers seem to start when they're 18 or 19. Great music has been made by people in their early 20's."

Although he doesn't believe he's done his best work yet, Columbus feels that film reaches people in the same ways as rock 'n' roll. "Great music was made by younger people, so I felt film could just sorta follow suit."

Columbus, who makes his home in New York, plans to spend time with his wife "walking through the park and hopefully get inspired and write something else." In the meantime, he anxiously awaits reaction to Heartbreak Hotel. "You're always surprised by what people say about the film and how people respond to it," says Columbus. "But I really feel that Heartbreak is a film for everyone; it's really not geared to any specific audience. It's very difficult to peg this film. It's a very weird film."

A crowd of about 1,000 stands behind barricades outside the Capitol Records building on Vine Street in Hollywood as the Beatles song "Stawberry Fields Forever" plays on speakers. Former Beatle John Lennon was posthumously honored Friday with a star on Walk of Fame.

shove to get close to . . . what??? The star's been there for a while; you could go see it anytime, (in fact it had already been defaced). And John Lennon. Well, not much chance of him showing up.

More people continued to arrive, while others with signs were hanging out the windows of nearby buildings. A John Lennon look-alike showed up, and local radio stations were handing out T-shirts. An estimated 2,000 fans turned out for the final official unveiling of the star at 12:30, outnumbering the press by more than four to one. Most of them were pretty young, which shows both that the present generation hasn't forgotten live was exciting. Musically, he neared perfection. But seeing him perform was a let-down. "Reg" sat at his piano throughout most of the show and began his set with several ballads, including "Sorry Seems To Be the Hardest Word," which transcended a mellow attitude to the audience.

He then continued with a set that spanned both the John and Dwight personas, including songs from the new album as well as past eras of his 20-year career. The longevity of his musical success could be gauged by the mixture of people he attracted.

Men with long hair, short hair, gray hair and no hair rocked together during his performance of "The Bitch is Back." "Philadelphia Freedom" brought everyone, including mothers with children, to their feet. And "Candle in the Wind," a homage to Marilyn Monroe, inspired a Bic-lighter vigil.

Surprise appearances by Eric Clapton and bass-guitarist Steve Lukather of Toto, during an encore rendition of "Saturday Night's Alright For Fighting," drove the crowd into a wild dancing frenzy. Excited fans screamed requests for their personal favorite tunes, but Clapton and Lukather stayed only for the one song.

Despite his widely varied selection, Dwight neglected to play "Bennie and the Jets" and "Crocodile Rock." The absence of these two favorites dampened the spirit of anticipated rocking.

A fabulous light-show, blending ominously with a beautiful moon-lit night, added spectacle to the concert. Gorgeous purple and red lights fused in and out with the music and bright white lights illuminated the audience to match song lyrics.

Unfortunately, the lighting did not overcome Dwight's lack of stage presence. The blue-suit image seems to have drained the electric energy those flashy outfits once inspired.

Phoenix

somewhat forced. The passion was there, but there was just too much confusion. I'd just turned 16 when I did that."

At the age of eighteen, River boasts a film career now more promising than ever. He will be making an upcoming cameo appearance in Steven Spielberg's upcoming Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade. And although he has no immediate plans, River is doubtful to sit idle for long. He is of the status in Hollywood where projects will find him. (Though he does admit a strong desire to work with Christopher Walken).

'60s influence

When he's not filming, River is thinking, reading, writing, playing in his band back home in Florida — anything to satisfy his strong analytical and creative impulses. The off-camera River Phoenix is not as concerned with the net profits of his films, as he is about the larger issues of society which probably escape the thoughts of many of his peers — a side of him to which the media has shaded with images of the 1960s.

"I guess people just associate that (the '60s) to any tinge of question or ideas that are looked at as being radical. It's just freedom of thought. I guess someone that's involved and speaks out his political opinions, social opinions — they associate that with the '60s."

One of River's opinions that people don't always take a liking to is his belief in the inter-dependence of all living things on the planet. "They feel that the human race is the superior race, and because of that we have the right to inflict pain, and that we can use our power in any way, and control everything," he said. "And it's not like we're guiding it in a good direction. We're just building contraptions and advancing technology, and we don't have any solutions for any of the waste or any of the problems that stem from that.

"It's all very economical. It's all very for-the-moment, for how much money can we make tomorrow. Let's keep our credit at this, or let's stay up there in the stock market, and that's all we look for. And what good is all this money that they're making, all this success, when inevitably we're going to become this big, huge junk pile, a bunch of wasted mutants running all over the place. I mean, we're creating our own hell."

Quite a lot to think about for this teenage heartthrob. River's social ambitions, however, are not to try and change the world. "I think that's somewhat of an arrogant assumption, that you can change the world on your own." He believes that real changes in this century will only happen with a revolution of the mind rather than physically rising up and taking over. "It needs to be a majority of the people becoming aware and conscious of their surroundings and themselves. There should be a general understanding that there is some kind of universal truth that we could all tap into."

River and Ronnie

Another hot topic for the young actor is his skepticism of the Reagan administration. "Our own government that we're paying taxes to are acting like terrorists in other countries: murdering, raping, robbing, and exploiting, and not telling us about it. Not telling us about half of it.

See PHOENIX, Page 35

Phoenix

"I sometimes am very embarrassed by the hypocrisy, the self-righteousness that the American government puts on toward other countries. But I guess America is the best at cover-ups. America is the best at getting away with something because they've got the media on their side, they've got television, they're really slick."

Spending a couple hours with River is, well it's not fluff interviewing. But what about his lighter side. What about the important question to thousands of young girls — who does River go out with? "I don't really date people," he laughs, "I stopped dating people when I was 14."

What about sex? "Sex isn't really a casual thing for me. In order to engage in something like that, I have to really care for someone," he says as he lowers his voice. "It has to go beyond just a physical attraction, because I've had just too many ill experiences with just going on impulse and having this flesh-mass next to you. It's really degrading, and not all that rewarding."

By the end of the interview, we had covered more ground than the Bush-Dukakis debate. But it didn't appear forced, like he was trying to impress someone. "Hey you want to hear a tape of my garage-band back home?," he asks. As he pops the cassette into the recorder, the 18-year-old River Phoenix emerges once again, leaving behind the more mature trappings of his mind. But the intensity remains, like any good actor, in his eyes.

Lennon

John Lennon, and that most of the people of Lennon's generation all have day jobs.

Yoko Ono was the big star of the afternoon. Without her the movie Imagine could not have been made. But certainly she's been around, and most of the time nobody's interested in talking to her or hearing her music. She has fulfilled the ultimate groupie dream — sleep with a star; then you are a star in your own right.

Then the sound system went out just as a couple of members of the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce got up to give speeches. Nobody wanted to hear them anyway, but one rolly-polly guy (who definitely didn't need the PA system to be heard) said "We've got a ceremony and we're going to stick with it." The crowd wasn't happy; they wanted to hear from Yoko.

They finally did get the sound system fixed; the old guys gave their speeches; Yoko Ono broke out in tears and said that John would have been proud and that he loved L.A. very much.

The rumor is that the movie Imagine is very good. But I find it all depressing because John Lennon has been dead for almost eight years now, and still makes a lot more money than I do. And why don't Paul, George, and Ringo get stars?

Louganis retires

By Larry Siddons
AP Sports Writer

SEOUL, South Korea — Greg Louganis, the winningest men's diver in Olympic history, announced his retirement Sunday to concentrate on acting.

Still showing the bald spot where five stitches were needed after he hit his head on the 3-meter springboard, Louganis broke the news while accepting the Olympic Spirit Award as the top American athlete in the Games.

"This is a great way to end my diving career," Louganis said.

Louganis, 28, from Boca Raton, Fla., came back from his bang with the board in the preliminaries to win the springboard completed his second consecutive Olympic diving double by winning the 10-meter platform on his final dive.

He became the only male diver to win the two events twice, and only the second diver to accomplish the feat. Patty McCormack of the United States won two gold medals in diving at both the 1952 and '56 Games. Those four golds are the record for one diver.

Hollywood is where his future lies, Louganis said.

"I've been sent a number of scripts," Louganis said. "Now, I'll have an opportunity to take part in some of them."

He said his first film role would be a small part in "Stiff," which he described as "a zany comedy."

Football

Wills, the true freshman tailback whose you-can't-tackle-me running style has earned him a spot in Donahue's game plan, took over.

He ran inside for five yards. He swept right for nine. He swept left for seven. And, with the ball on the 11-yard line, Wills bumped off the line, broke another tackle and scampered left for an 11-yard touchdown run that thrust UCLA right back into the game at 17-17 with 12:37 remaining and silenced the animales in the stands.

"I wasn't nervous, I was pumped," an elated Wills said, after finishing with 51 yards on just eight carries. "I was hella-pumped. I mean, it's weird having 72,000 people boo you, but I was just pumped."

The Huskies marched right back behind the talented junior Conklin, who finished with 19 of 37 passes for 163 yards. He mixed deceiving option rushing plays (he ran for 39 yards) with tough-to-defend short passes to put Washington on the UCLA 19-yard line with a third-and-seven with 6:19 remaining.

A bad snap out of the shotgun forced Conklin into an 11-yard loss, but, with the ball on the 30, the Huskies seemed poised for a go-ahead field goal.

Husky coach Don James tried to outfox the Bruins, though, as Conklin took the snap and dumped a shovel pass to Covington.

It didn't fool Randy Beverly.

Beverly, a defensive back and special teams specialist, nabbed Covington right away for a four-yard loss, killing the Huskies' plot and swinging momentum back towards UCLA's shady sideline.

After trading punts, the stage was set for UCLA's final drive, ending with the game-winning toss to Moore.

"That was the best quarterback in America who hit that pass," Donahue said. "Troy showed a lot of poise. He made some great plays in the heat of their defense.

"But that's what a true Heisman Trophy candidate does. And he's a true Heisman Trophy candidate."

"The name of this game is to do it when it counts," ABC commentator Mike Adamle said. "He did it when it counted."

As did the Bruins as a whole. Coming into the game, Donahue had said that he would know a whole lot more about his football team after the test in Seattle.

Well, Coach, the verdict?

"We now know our team can come into as difficult an environment as possible and win," he said. "If you win, you know you have a really good football team."

Donahue then sat back, all wet and smiles and looked at his drenched self.

"It was one of the nicest baths I've ever had," he said of his soda-drenching from the players, a traditional Bruin victory rite. "I relished every drop of it."

Bruin Notes — The Bruins put together a 99-yard scoring drive in the second quarter for their first touchdown, capped by a one-yard run by Ball. . .The win was UCLA's 400th as a school, with Donahue's 102 wins accounting for over 25 percent. . .On his third-down scramble before the pass to Moore, Aikman lost both his shoe and his contact lens. The Bruins had to call their final time-out to restore order. "Troy had so much poise, the only time he got excited was when he lost his shoe and his contact," Donahue said. . .The Bruins rushed for 197 yards on 43 carries.

Get USC tickets, it'll be a big one

INFORMATION REGARDING USC STUDENT TICKETS

Please read these instructions carefully

1. Student tickets for the UCLA-USC Football game will be distributed in accordance with the procedures outlined below. The Game will be played on Saturday, November 19, 1988 in the Rose Bowl. Student tickets are priced at $11.00.

2. The reserved seat student tickets for the UCLA-USC Football game will be sold on the basis of priority numbers issued with each student's Season Football ticket. The priority numbers were determined through a random number generating computer system.

3. The priority numbers will serve as the method of admission to the area where the ticket windows are located. Each priority number issued specifies the time and date when the holder of that priority number is to report to Pauley Pavilion to purchase the actual admission ticket to the game. STUDENTS ARE URGED TO REPORT TO PAULEY PAVILION ONLY AT THE TIME SPECIFIED ON THEIR PRIORITY NUMBERED TICKET.

4. EACH STUDENT WITH ONE PRIORITY NUMBER WILL BE ALLOWED TO PURCHASE TWO (2) USC STUDENT TICKETS, PROVIDING THE STUDENT HOLDING THE PRIORITY NUMBER PRESENTS TWO CURRENT UCLA REGISTRATION CARDS (ONE OF WHICH MUST BE HIS OR HER OWN) AND HIS OR HER OWN UCLA STUDENT PICTURE IDENTIFICATION CARD AT THE TIME OF TICKET PURCHASE.

5. Students who did not obtain tickets or a priority number on a season basis but still desire to purchase USC Football tickets may either obtain a priority number in advance at the Central Ticket Office beginning on Monday, October 3 or report to Gate 3, Pauley Pavilion, Wednesday, October 5 at 2 p.m.

6. The best seats in the student section will be sold first. Distribution of these seats, as well as the other seats, will be made equally among all ticket sellers. If more than two persons wish to sit together, then, on the day of the sale, they should arrive at the latest time designation on the priority numbers they hold and they will be issued tickets together by standing in line behind the same ticket seller. Since the assignment of priority numbers was done randomly, students desiring seats together will have to decide whether they wish to pass up the lower priority number in order to sit together.

7. Students should report to Gate 3, Pauley Pavilion at the time designated on their priority numbered ticket. As the priority numbers are called, the students must show their number to the doorman and are admitted to the area where the tickets are purchased.

8. When the student is at the ticket window, he or she must present all of the following:

a. Priority numbered ticket, which is retained by the ticket seller.

b. Current UCLA Registration Card, which is punched by the ticket seller.

c. UCLA Student Photo ID Card.

d. Amount of cash required to purchase game ticket ($11.00 per ticket). No checks will be accepted. CASH ONLY.

9. Those students who are not present at the time their priority number is called should report to Gate 3, Pauley Pavilion, at their earliest convenience after their priority number time, at which time accommodations will be made to insure they purchase a ticket.

Former Bruin and now United States team captain Karch Kiraly led the attack as team USA took the gold, going undefeated in Seoul.

Olympics

Flo-Jo, in the 100 meters, and Andre Phillips, who got the monkey off of his back after finally defeating Edwin Moses and winning the gold medal in400 meter hurdles.

Surprise silver medalist Mike Powell leaped past Larry Myricks and the rest of the field behind Carl Lewis to take second in the long jump. Danny Everett wasn't so bad either, as he completed the sweep for the U.S. in the open 400 meters, and gave his relay team members an early lead in the 4 X 400 meter relay en route to a gold.

So it would be an understatement to say that UCLA was a major factor on the track and in the pits—as well in Seoul.

What about on the courts? The U.S. volleyball team avenged the basketball upset and defeated the Soviet Union Saturday night in four games for the gold medal.

And who better to lead the attack then UCLA's former captain and now USA team captain Kiraly. Being heralded as the best player in the world going into the Olympics, Kiraly did nothing to disprove that as the U.S. team went to him throughout the tourney in clutch situations. But also lending a hand were Doug Partie, Dave Saunders and Ricci Luyties.

A pair of Bruins also made a splash in the pool as well as Tom Jager dashed to a gold and a silver. Jager's name will go down in history as well as he ran a leg on the world-record-setting and gold-medal-winning 4 X 100 freestyle relay and also added a silver in the 50 meter freestyle behind American phenomenon Matt Biondi. Also adding support in the water was Craig Oppel, who took a gold in the 4 X 200 relay.

So the United States truly showed its colors in the games, but if you looked closely, underneath the Red, White and Blue, there was a glimpse of Blue and Gold.

/DAILY BRUIN FILE PHOTO

There was plenty of reason for Florence Griffith-Joyner to smile in Seoul these past weeks (here shone in the 1984 games, nails and all) as she delighted the world with her blazing speed and winning smile en route to three Gold medals and a silver.

Some rough digs in Seattle

Husky Stadium tough as usual

By Brian Murphy
Sports Editor

SEATTLE — As it turned out, the rumors of Seattle's death were greatly exaggerated.

Coming into Saturday's excruciatingly close 24-17 win over the University of Washington here, many thought the Husky would play sleeping dog to the Bruin juggernaut.

Certainly the oddsmakers in Las Vegas didn't care that the last Bruin win in Seattle was in 1978, as they made UCLA prohibitive 13-point favorites.

And, it seemed, the general feeling among the Southland press and fans was that all of UCLA head coach Terry Donahue's talk of Seattle this, Seattle that was just coaching doubletalk.

Nonsense.

Husky Stadium and its tenants proved their worth on Saturday, as the combination of outrageous fan noise and talented, opportunistic Husky play nearly put an end to UCLA's budding dream season.

Yet, somehow, someway, the Bruins pulled it out. In spite of all the extra-curriculars. And there were plenty.

Like the old tunnel psych-out maneuver. You know, the old mind games last found on the high school field. Like the lights-out thing and the barking schtick.

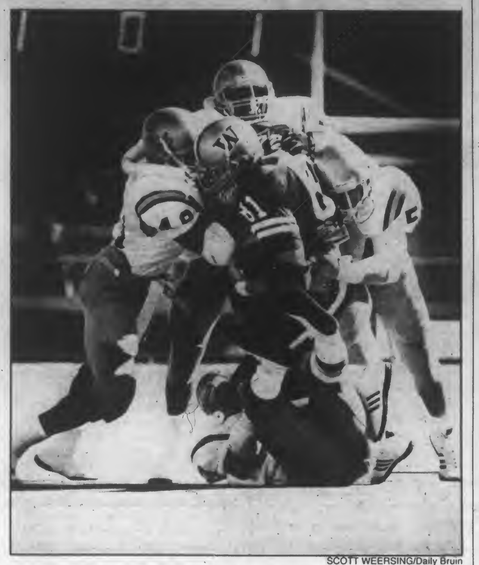
"They turn the lights out in the tunnel (leading from the locker room to the field)," UCLA tailback Eric Ball said. "And (the players) come up behind us and bark."

"They were kicking the door to our locker room before the game," UCLA cornerback Darryl Henley said.

And that was all before the Bruins took the field. The field situation itself was rather intimidating.

The stands, which seat 72,500, are intensely vertical clumps of aluminum, fondly nicknamed "Jaws II". And the strange, carpety AstroTurf also presented a decidedly home-field edge.

Yes, despite Husky Stadium's lovely setting, what with a beautiful, boat-filled lake touching the east end of the stadium, things were less-than-friendly for the Bruins, whose hometown Rose Bowl crowds, with the exception of games against USC and Nebraska, are usually a notch below comatose.



SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Husky tight end Mark Kilpack gets a lesson that the Bruin defense can be just as mean as the Seattle crowd.

You've heard stories that walking into Lousiana State University's rabid Tiger Stadium in Baton Rouge is like "walking into a breath of bourbon"? Well, then, walking into Husky Stadium is the emotional equivalent of walking into a giant breath of a wet dog.

After all, they call it the "Dawg House" up here.

"Yeah, and if you don't win up here, you are in the dog house," Henley laughed after the game.

During the game, the antics continued. At halftime, when the Huskies tied the score with a late second quarter touchdown, they barked again in the tunnel—nice and loud for the Bruins to hear.

Late in the game, when the outcome was still in doubt, Husky fans took the opportunity to show their mettle—by pounding on the metal.

The furious foot-stomping of the fans was so intense that the Husky Stadium press box, perched precariously from the rafters, rumbled and shook with an eerie roar.

Imagine what is was like for the Bruins on the field—to be the object of all that focused rage.

"I've never been up here before," UCLA quarterback Troy Aikman said. "It's hard up here."

But the Bruins were able to enjoy themselves in the end. After all, he who barks last, barks best.

So, after Aikman hit split-end Reggie Moore on a dramatic, 48-yard touchdown pass with 1:28 remaining, the Bruins rejoiced wildly in the tunnel. This time, the lights were on and the Huskies weren't barking.

But UCLA was.

The Bruins barked and barked up and down the tunnel to the point where it got under the Huskies' proud fur.

"It's something you expect," UW quarterback Cary Conklin told the Seattle Times/Post-Intelligencer. "It kind of bothers me. They were doing all the barking, and they barely squeezed out of here with a seven-point win."

Ah, but Cary, you're missing the point—the point is the Bruins did squeeze out of here.

"Hey, it all comes through here," Henley said. "The Pac-10 championship, the national championship—it all comes through Washington.

"It's becoming a real nice rivalry."

Dani shines for men

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

Junior Mark Dani, a transfer from Grossmont College in El Cajon, has already made a name for himself as a member of UCLA's men's cross country team.

For the second time in as many meets this season, Dani finished one second out of first place, leading the Bruins to a third-place finish at the Stanford Invitational in Palo Alto on Saturday.

But not even Dani, the 1987 California Community College cross country champion, could help UCLA overrun host Stanford. The Cardinal totaled an amazing 27 points (points are the sum of the team's top five individual placings), while Arizona managed an otherwise respectable 98. The Bruins tallied 104.

Interestingly, UCLA's score Saturday would have won last year's Stanford Invitational, where the Bruins placed eighth.

"I think Stanford would've beaten anybody (Saturday)," head coach Bob Larsen admitted. "To be beaten by Stanford and Arizona—we're talking some pretty good teams there."

Don't get Larsen wrong. He's not satisfied with third place. "We're a little bit frustrated we didn't finish second when we knew we could've," Larsen said. "We've beaten some good teams, but our aspirations are higher."

It was significant that UCLA bettered teams such as USC (126), Cal (148), UC Irvine (155) and CSULA (162).

Moreover, three of the five Bruin scorers weren't in peak condition Saturday, according to Larsen. Come championships, they should be more prepared physically.

Dani was no doubt ready for Saturday. Trailing Fresno State's Calvin Gaziano—who beat Dani last weekend by one second—late in the race, Dani came on in the last three-quarters of a mile. Gaziano held on, and Dani finished the 10,000 meters in 30:58. "He looked really good," Larsen said.

Redshirt freshman Richard Erbes also finished strongly for UCLA. In only his second scored collegiate race, Erbes placed 15th (31:50). "That's a big race for him," Larsen stated.

UCLA's three other scorers, senior Jim Ortiz and juniors Beat Ammann and Victor Santamaria were lacking something Saturday, according to Larsen.

Ortiz (22nd, 32:04) may still have been recovering from a bout with the flu last week, while Ammann (32nd, 32:16) and Santamaria (33rd, 32:18) were both unusually fatigued before the race.

Cross Country Notes: In the Stanford Invitational open race the UCLA "B" team finished second with 133 points. Cal State Long Beach's "A" squad was first with 108. Bruin leaders were freshman Jeff Korn (seventh, 32:23) and Jeff Wood (13th, 32:36).

Bruin soccer game ends in unbroken tie

By Chris Koutures
Staff Writer

The Bruin Men's Soccer squad battled to a 1-1 tie at Fresno State Sunday afternoon.

Bulldog Paul Tell scored the first goal of the match after a scoreless first half. UCLA goalkeeper Anton Nistl did preserve the deadlock by saving a Fresno penalty kick in the 40th minute.

Forward Billy Thompson equalized the match, yet neither team could break the tie through two ten-minute overtime periods. The Bulldogs had the best chance to do so- but with eight seconds to go in the first period midfielder Steve Black made an endline save on a looping header.

UCLA, now 5-4-1 on the season, takes the week off before facing Stanford and California in the Pac-10 tournament next weekend in Berkeley.

Pac-10 is rolling

By Tom Sullivan
Assistant Sports Editor

The Race for the Roses—as well as the Heisman Trophy—heated up this weekend, as Seattle and Tuscon were the sites for two very important Pac-10 games.

No. 2 UCLA won a nail-biter in the "Dawg House" defeating Washington 24-17, on some fourth quarter heroics by Troy Aikman. Meanwhile, down in Tuscon, No. 3 Southern Cal put the hurt on Arizona, hammering the Wildcats 38-15 behind Rodney Peete's three touchdown passes.

Aikman showed why he still leads the Heisman race, rallying the Bruins to victory before a national television audience and 71,224 screaming Washington fans. Aikman led the Bruins to two fourth quarter scores, coming through when the chips were down. Aikman finished the game with 175 yards, on 16 of 26 passing for one touchdown and one interception.

Larry Smith must have enjoyed his homecoming in Tuscon, where he was head coach for seven years. USC hammered the Wildcats behind the bruising ground game, led by Ricky Earvins (135 yards) and their huge offensive line. Peete also had a terrific game, completing 20 of 27 for 219 yards and three touchdowns. to

The Wildcats, for their part, turned the ball over five times, four times in their own territory.

The 20th-ranked Oregon Ducks, without the services of Bill "Billy the Kid" Musgrave, brought their record to 4-0 with a convincing 34-13 win over San Diego State. Derek Loville carried the ball 23 times for 129 yards and three touchdowns, while back-up signal caller Pete Nelson threw a 66-yard touchdown on his first pass.

Washington State, one of the surprise teams of the year, extended its record to 3-1, scorching Tennessee 52-24, as Timm Rossenbach threw for 352 yards and six touchdowns. Altogether, the Cougars amassed 618 yards, sending the Volunteers down in flames and into their worst start in history at 0-5.

Troy Taylor passed for a career high 370 yards as California defeated San Jose State in Strawberry Canyon 21-14. San Jose State led 14-13 before Cal mounted its last scoring drive, going 80 yards. y

The Beavers of Oregon State improved their record to 3-2, their best start since 1970, coming back to win 21-10 over Fresno State. Erik Wilhelm threw for 215 yards and two touchdowns.

No. 5 Notre Dame ravaged Stanford and quarterback Brian Johnson, winning a laugher 42-14. The Irish played a flawless football, while Stanford struggled all day. Brian Johnson hit only 7 of 18, and one interception. Jack Elway's club fell to 1-3, while the Irish improved to 4-0.

Overall, the Pac-10 increased its record to 24-4 out of conference.

Bruins beat Huskies, 24-17

back hit split end Reggie Moore on a dramatic 48-yard touchdown pass with 1:28 remaining, springing the Bruins to an improbable 24-17 win over the Huskies — UCLA's first win in the Emerald City since 1978.

Aikman, who had just scrambled 10 yards on a third and 9 to keep UCLA's hopes alive, hooked up with Moore on a slant pattern over the middle. With man-to-man coverage, Moore took the pass around the 30-yard line and simply outran Husky defensive back Art Malone for the winning score, setting off a frenzied Bruin celebration in the end zone.

"I knew I could beat my man," Moore said. "I felt it. It happened. All I saw was a purple and gold end zone."

The win raised UCLA's record to 4-0, 1-0 in conference play—the Bruins' best start since 1982.

All of a sudden, Pasadena in January looked a little clearer. And, yes, that loud sound you heard was Donahue breathing a rather large sigh of relief.

"It was a great win for UCLA," Donahue said, dripping wet from the victory bath of soda his players gave him. "I thought it was very significant for us to win it in the fourth quarter, and I thought it was significant that we won it coming from behind."

And come from behind they did. Entering the final quarter, the Huskies held a 17-10 lead that they looked never to relinquish. At that time, it seemed that almost everything was going against UCLA.

Consider:

—The Huskies were playing nearly flawless football, as quarterback Cary Conklin was keeping the Bruins off balance with a potent option offense and a threatening short-pass offense.

—The Huskies had a firm grip on all momentum, as they had just scored the go-ahead touchdown with 1:56 left in the third quarter on James Compton's two-yard run, after Washington recovered UCLA tailback Eric Ball's fumble at the Bruin 16-yard line. Ball otherwise had a fine day, carrying 22 times for 107 punishing yards.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Freshman tailback Shawn Wills celebrates after Saturday's victory.

—The Seattle atmosphere was every bit as brutal as expected, with the rabid Husky crowd ranting and raving deafeningly throughout the game.

—And it was UCLA's first road game of the year. Playing on the road is never easy, and it was extra-tough for the Bruins to experience their first away contest in the noisy Northwest.

About the only thing going in UCLA's favor was some decidedly SoCal weather, as the usual Seattle dose of rain gave way to clear, bright and 80-degree skies.

But the Huskies adapted just fine to the climate, thank you.

So how the heck did the Bruins pull it out?

Well, basically, it was the end-of-game poise of Aikman, the alertness of a special teams expert, the continued heroics of an 18-year old running back and the fortunate drop of a referee's flag.

On the penultimate play of the third quarter, the Bruins faced a third-and-10 at their own 35-yard line. With the aluminum stands rocking back and forth, Aikman dropped back and threw an incomplete pass intended for Ball.

Fourth down. Punting situation. And things were looking awfully purple and gold.

Until the flag.

After Aikman released the pass, a Husky lineman seemed to trip him up. The official, standing right in front of Aikman, dropped his yellow flag for roughing the passer — and suddenly the Bruins received a charge of life.

First down. UCLA ball.

Enter Shawn Wills.

Reptilian creature takes bite out of Bruins

Williams is unlucky one

By Matt Purdue
Staff Writer

As expected, the UCLA women's cross country team had problems with some Arkansas Razorbacks and Texas Longhorns Saturday. Surprisingly, however, the Bruins also fell victim to a pack of California Golden Bears and one salamander.

Highly touted Arkansas and 1987 NCAA runner-up Texas finished one-two at the Stanford Invitational in Palo Alto. Unexpectedly, however, Cal proved, at least for now, that it is the best in the west, finishing third, ahead of UCLA.

As if that weren't enough, Bruin senior Debbie Williams was taken to a local emergency room after she was bitten by what appeared to be a salamander on the course. According to head coach Bob Messina, Williams stopped to pick up the reptilian creature after it was injured by other runners, and she was struck on the finger.

"It got kicked around a little bit, and it wasn't acting like itself," Messina said. Williams was released from the hospital a short time after being treated for swelling

As for Messina's diagnosis of his team's performance after their first defeat in two meets this season: "If Texas and Arkansas are as good as everybody thinks they are, then we're right there," he said.

"I knew (Cal) would run well but not this well," he added. "I'm surprised they beat us. Now they're going to give us a little on the West Coast."

Arkansas won the Invitational with 67 points (points are sum of the team's top five individual placings; thus the lowest score wins), while Texas scored 68. Cal, placing three harriers ahead of UCLA's second finisher, totaled 78 to the Bruins' 88.

"That seems like a big spread (between UCLA and Arkansas)," Messina explained, "but in cross country, it's one person running."

Individually, junior Laurie Chapman, who finished fifth overall at the Bruins' last meet, led the way for the varsity again. Despite getting tripped up in the home stretch, she finished in sixth, just five seconds out of third. She completed the 5000 meters in 17:37. "She came on really well," Messina commented.

Bruin senior Kim Stewart finished 14th (17:55) overall. "The key to our team," Messina said, "is getting Kim Stewart to move up."

Sophomore Melissa Sutton "just keeps coming on," according to Messina. She placed 19th (18:13).

Williams overcame the salamander incident to place 21st (18:20), senior Pam Thompson was 28th (18:29), junior Laura Chapel was 33rd (18:42), and junior Kristi Bache was 38th 18:51.

"Overall, I think we're right in it," Messina assessed. "Whether or not we win at this point doesn't matter if we run with top teams like Texas and Arkansas."

The coach, however, did stress the need for improvement from the varsity's fifth and sixth runners. "We have incredible depth, so we just have to move it up," he said. "We can do better, and I think the girls know it."

Cross Country Notes: In the Stanford Invitational, the UCLA "B" team finished second with 85 points. Cal Poly SLO's "A" team won it with 76. Bruins' placings and times follow:

Jennifer Ashe—ninth, 18:39; Tammy Snyder—11th, 18:40; C'za Azcueta—17th, 18:59; Vell Lehman—22nd,19:05; Jennifer Smith—26th, 19:14.

Polo wins

This weekend UCLA's water polo team traveled up to Palo Alto for the NorCal tournament with hopes of remaining undefeated and the top team in the country.

Thanks to the heroics of Junior All-American Alex Rousseau and his three goals in the semifinals, UCLA got past Stanford 6-3. In the finals, UCLA knocked off Cal 5-4 to win the tourney and raise its overall record to a perfect 15-0.

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Three UCLA runners—Laura Chapel, Midge Artega and Kim Stewart—helped the Bruins to a solid fourth place finish at the Stanford Invitational on Saturday.

Aikman leads UCLA out of doghouse

4th-quarter TD saves day in 24-17 win

By Brian Murphy
Sports Editor

SEATTLE — With one minute and 36 seconds remaining, and the score tied in the UCLA football team's white-knuckle clash with the University of Washington here Saturday, there were all kinds of evil spirits whipping around bright and noisy Husky Stadium.

There was the ghost of conference openers past haunting UCLA head coach Terry Donahue, as his Bruins have staggered to only one opening win in their past six tries. And this Pacific-10 conference opener against the Huskies was shaping up none-too-favorably.

There was also the ghost of Seattle present, as the eerie roar of 71,224 purple-clad Husky fans was making life an inaudible nightmare for UCLA.

And, at that moment in time, there was the ghost of Rose Bowls future stalking the Bruins. Were the Bruins to lose or tie this opener, a New Year's Day in Pasadena would look less than promising.

So, in the face of all that, Heisman Trophy candidate Troy Aikman did some ghostbusting that even Bill Murray would be proud of, as the Bruin quarter-

Bruins finish Olympics in grand style

The 24th Olympiad proved to be a great moment for the United States, as it finished third in the total medal count with 94.

Leading the assault on Fort Knox for the U.S. were suchnotables as Jackie Joyner-Kersee, Florence Griffith-Joyner, Steve Lewis, Karch Kiraly and Evelyn Ashford. But the most notable link between these names, is not the gold they will carry on their neck, but their connection to UCLA, as all are either past or current Bruins.

All in all, UCLA totaled 21 medals, which stands 11th best—behind countries that is.

The Blue and Gold were the most reckoned force for the Red, White and Blue in the track and field events in taking home 10 gold medals alone. With Flo-Jo smiling her way to three golds, threeOlympic records, a silver and a world record and 19-year old Steve Lewis taking home twogolds, and a tie of the Olympic and world record in the 1600 meter relay, UCLA was looking pretty good.

And what about Joyner-Kersee blasting her way to another world mark in the heptathlon and taking the long jump as well? Of course, you can't leave out the second fastest woman ever, Evelyn Ashford, who anchored the victorious 4 X 100 meter relay, and placed second only to

Shuttle Discovery lands at Edwards base

Sonic booms herald new flight program

By Eugene Ahn, Staff Writer

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — Space shuttle Discovery left Earth last week with five astronauts and NASA's tender but ambitious hope to resume manned space exploration. It returned Monday morning in a show of precision, rekindling enthusiasm for America's space program.

Discovery announced its arrival above the Air Force base with two sonic booms, which were heard and felt as far north as Santa Barbara and as far south as suburban Valencia, according to area residents and police.

Here at Edwards, some 80 miles northeast of Los Angeles, 425,000 spectators cheered wildly at the sound of the sonic booms, but hushed as they watched Discovery quietly descend from the Mohave Desert's azure sky.

Aboard Discovery, mission commander Frederick H. Hauck, 47, and pilot Richard O. Covey, 42, turned off the shuttle's automatic pilot and steered the craft in manually.

The crowds cheered again when Discovery touched down, pressing its landing gear into the mirage of a dusty lakebed runway used by the Air Force. When the shuttle landed at 9:37

Bush, Dukakis praise Discovery shuttle crew

By Donald M. Rothberg
Associated Press

Presidential candidates George Bush and Michael Dukakis hailed the success of the Discovery space shuttle mission on Monday, while their top campaign aides discussed how to salvage a second debate after the League of Women Voters abruptly withdrew as sponsor.

"A great day for our country," proclaimed the Republican vice president, who was on hand at Edwards Air Force Base, California, to witness the landing of the shuttle. Bush was drawn to within a few feet of the space craft and shook the hands of the five-member crew as they emerged.

"America is back in space," Democrat Dukakis told a rally in Hartford, Conn. "We are proud and we are thrilled at its achievements and the courage of that crew."

Meanwhile, aides to both candidates predicted a second debate would occur despite the withdrawal of the League.

James A. Baker III, chairman of the Bush campaign, and Paul Brountas, his counterpart on the Dukakis campaign, opened

Man sentenced to 8 years for rape in URL

A man who raped a UCLA student in the University Research Library last year was sentenced to eight years without possibility of parole in Los Angeles County Superior Court yesterday.

Nathan Johnny Brocato, who received the maximum sentence for a single count of rape, neither spoke nor showed emotion when the sentence was delivered. His victim was not present in the Santa Monica courtroom, although state law would have permitted her to address the judge before the sentencing.

A jury declared Brocato guilty last month of two counts of rape and one count of attempted rape for the Oct. 5 assault, but Judge

Clarification

In yesterday's Bruin, the caption to the "Unearthing Peruvian gold" photo incorrectly said the artifact was recovered from the Moche burial site. Though from the Moche civilization, the artifact was actually from a display at the UCLA Museum of Cultural History in Haines Hall.

'Imagine: John Lennon' premieres in Westwood

By Kevin J. Messick
Off-Campus Editor

The world premiere of the new Warner Brother's motion picture Imagine: John Lennon was held in Westwood last night, as stars from the entertainment and music industry joined the Lennon family to celebrate the event. Yoko Ono and John's first wife Cynthia Lennon (flown in from the U.K. especially for the event) passed before crowds of anxious stargazers and paparazzi at the Mann National Theater. "This is not a celebration, it's very sad actually," said Cynthia Lennon, "though it does bring back memories."

Other celebrities attending the premiere included Michael J. Fox ("John was my favorite because he was the bravest Beatle, he just opened himself up. He wasn't afraid"); Olympic Gold Medalists Greg Louganis and Janet Evans; Randy (Michael's brother) Jackson; L.A. LAW's Corbin Bernsen (who likes the Beatles song "The Taxman," "It's just the situation"); the Beastie Boys; Donna Mills ("I was fickle. I was in love with Paul, then George for a while, but I don't know if I was ever in love with John, he was more to be inspired by"); Katie Wagner (RJ's daughter, who used to date Julian Lennon); Susan Dey and many more.

Filmmakers David L. Wolper and Andrew Solt were also in attendance, and hosted a private party at the Hard Rock Cafe last night with a star-studded gathering including musicians Quincy Jones, Billy Idol, Little Richard, Guns 'n Roses, Whitesnake, Los Lobos, Tom Petty and the Bangles.

CalPIRG funds withheld

ASUCLA director keeps $20,000 from organization for auditing infractions

By Richard Hopkins
Staff Writer

Nearly $22,000 is being withheld from the California Public Interest Research Group (CalPIRG) by the ASUCLA finance department, at the request of ASUCLA Executive Director Jason Reed.

CalPIRG, a student advocacy organization, receives money from the two-dollar voluntary payment which accompanies student registration fees each quarter.

The request was issued because CalPIRG has failed to have its books and records audited by a Certified Public Accountant since 1985. Audits are required by a June 1, 1987 agreement signed by Reed and a CalPIRG executive director.

"We wrote a letter to Jason and Margaret (Snow) saying that the audit is late and asked them to hold the money until we turn it in," UCLA CalPIRG Organizer Julie Miles said.

But Mike Spence, Undergraduate Students Association Council general representative, said Reed made the withholding request before receiving CalPIRG's letter.

According to the agreement, CalPIRG must have an audit conducted at least on a yearly basis, then submit the audit to ASUCLA.

Reed was unsure of the amount withheld, but Miles indicated that CalPIRG will not receive any funds from fall quarter registration payments, which total an estimated $22,000.

"We (ASUCLA) are not going to make anymore payments to CalPIRG until they file the materials that are owed to us," said Reed, explaining that the group owed audits and account reports regarding internal control.

Miles estimated that the 1987 audits would be completed and submitted in December.

"I don't think they're in violation of the agreement, they owe us some materials pursuant to that agreement, but they have not, in my opinion, breached the agreement," he continued.

"We demonstrated our financial stability through our tax returns," said Miles.

At press time, the group had given ASUCLA its 1986 tax returns, according to Miles, and planned to submit the 1987 returns within a few days.

"They (CalPIRG) have indicated to me that they have had some problem getting the material together and they have promised it post-haste," said Reed.

Spence also questioned CalPIRG's refund policy for the voluntary two-dollar donations in an interview yesterday.

"They (CalPIRG) are supposed to give prior notice of a refund and they've never done that," said Spence.

According to its agreement with ASUCLA, CalPIRG must give refunds to students " . . . by a reasonably simple procedure and with adequate prior notice of the availability of and procedures for such refunds."

"There's been no notice, not even a flier, not even one little thing in one of the newsletters they print out that says you can get a refund by going to this place or calling this number," said Spence.

CalPIRG Statewide Organizer Ron Pembleton, however, asked "what's the problem with the refund if people are able to waive (the fee) every quarter? But the policy has been that if a student requests a refund he receives it."

"The refund slips are very straightforward and you can come to any CalPIRG office and pick them up," said Miles.

"You have to show that you've paid the fee . . . and within ten working days you would get your refund," said Miles.

CalPIRG will make a presentation at tonight's USAC meeting concerning the audit question and the CalPIRG program in general.

Nazih Rizk, legally blind, explains how he manages to produce beautiful photographs. He takes up to two hours to take a single picture.

Blind photographer sees world for others

By M. Radevich
Staff Writer

Photographer Nazih Rizk was explaining how it took him more than one-and-a-half hours to compose the photograph. First, he waited for the setting sun to reach the proper distance from the ground, and then he had to maneuver himself around to frame the sun between two skyscrapers.

When a guest asked why the sun was a bit off-center, Rizk replied, "That just goes to prove I'm blind."

Rizk, known as the world's first professional blind photographer, was at UCLA's International Student Center Saturday for the opening of his photography exhibit which will run through this month. An Egyptian, Rizk spoke English through an interpreter.

Blinded 12 years ago, Rizk uses his remaining senses to guide him in taking pictures. For example, he located the sun between the two skyscrapers by moving from side to side.

When the sun's rays did not heat his face, he knew that they were blocked by one of the buildings. In this way, he found the spot in the middle of where the sun's heat still reached him, which was the position he desired.

Gorbachev benefits from Soviet shake-up

By Mark J. Porubcansky
Associated Press

MOSCOW — Politburo member Vitaly I. Vorotnikov was moved to the ceremonial job of president of the Russian republic Monday as the Kremlin capped the biggest leadership shake-up in Mikhail S. Gorbachev's three and a half years in power.

The major beneficiary of the realignment of power was Gorbachev himself. The Communist Party's general secretary was elected Soviet president by the Supreme Soviet parliament Saturday to replace Andrei A. Gromyko, 79, who retired.

At a Monday meeting, the legislature of the Russian republic, the largest of the 15 Soviet republics, elected Interior Minister Alexander V. Vlasov, who was named a candidate member of the ruling Politburo during a Central Committee meeting Friday, the republic's new premier to replace Vorotnikov.

Vladimir P. Orlov, the 67-year-old president of the republic, retired, and Vorotnikov was elected his successor.

Gorbachev, who attended the meeting of the Russian republic's parliament in the Kremlin, recommended the changes, and lauded Orlov and Vorotnikov in remarks later shown on state-run television.

Last week, Gorbachev pushed a major shake-up through the Communist Party's policy-making Central Committee. He retired two full and two candidate Politburo members, promoted four other people and streamlined the Central Committee's apparatus.

Vlasov, 56, who worked in Gorbachev's home area of southern Russia before becoming interior minister, in charge of the uniformed police, in 1986. It appeared unlikely that he would continue to keep his job as the nation's top policeman. But a replacement would have to be named by national authorities, and not by the republican parliament that met Monday.

Vorotnikov's replacement as the Russian premier had been rumored in Moscow, and there have been persistent reports that the 62-year-old leader was ill. The official

American hostage released

By Merrill Hartson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The State Department, confirming the release Monday of an Indian hostage by kidnappers in Lebanon, said, "We are anxious to talk to him and learn if he has any information to share with us" about the nine Americans held in Lebanon.

Spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said Mithileshwar Singh, who is a permanent resident of the United States, was in Syrian hands in Beirut and would be taken to Damascus early Tuesday morning.

"We join with Mr. Singh's relatives in rejoicing in his release and call for the urgent, unconditional release of all hostages in Lebanon," Oakley said.

The spokeswoman said she did not how he was freed or his condition.

Oakley said Syria notified the U.S. embassy in Beirut and Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who is at the United Nations in New York, of Singh's release.

"He'll be transported tomorrow to Damascus, and at that point we will consult with him whether he wants to take advantage of the facilities at Wiesbaden," she said.

The United States maintains a hospital at the military base in West Germany.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said there would be no comment from the White House until Singh had been turned over to American authorities by Syria today.

The release had been expected at 2 p.m. EDT, and then at 3 p.m. After two more hours of anxious waiting, Oakley made the announcement in the State Department newsroom at 5 p.m.

Singh was released at 10:05 p.m. local time, 3:05 p.m. EDT, across the street from the Beirut headquarters of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency, which aids Palestinian refugees, said a police spokesman in Beirut who spoke on condition of anonymity.

"We can confirm," Oakley said, "that the Syrian government has told us they have

Health expert Cousins to speak

Tommorow's seminar first in a series on stress

By Patrick McGee
Science/Academics Editor

Norman Cousins

Dr. Norman Cousins, author of the book "The Healing Heart," will speak tomorrow at UCLA on the topic of "New Dimensions in Healing," which will examine new research at UCLA and elsewhere, studying the connection between patient attitudes and their treatment environments.

His address is the opening seminar in a series called "Moving Into the Solution," which will deal with preventing stress and promoting well-being. The series topics will range from emotional conflicts to family life and other areas that affect personal happiness, according to Nan Van Den Bergh.

Van Den Bergh is the director of the Staff & Faculty Service Center, UCLA's employee assistance center, which will sponsor the series.

"We believe that one's physical and mental health is related to their belief that they can be a success, that they can accomplish goals that they have and that their contribution counts," said Van Den Bergh, in explaining the focus of the series.

"This whole series will provide individuals with access to topics relating to well-being," she added. "A lot of it is just your basic positive thinking approach."

Cousins, adjunct professor in the school of medicine and the author of more than 25 books, has received numerous national and international awards from literary and humanitarian groups.

He is most widely known for his views on the positive effects of laughter, a position that he believes has been distorted to such an extent that "it's made to look as if all you have to do is laugh your way out of illness, and that's not true," said Cousins, in a telephone interview with the Bruin.

He continued that he doesn't use his approach as a substitute for medical treatment, but rather as a supplement to it, along with other methods.

"It is also useful to reach beyond laughter to other positive emotions — hope, faith, love, will to live, purpose and confidence," he explained.

In addition to Cousins, nine other speakers will be featured over the quarter, alternating between north and south campus locations. All seminars will take

Video catalog offers audio-visual options

By Karen Nahmias
Contributor

Are students tired of boring slides in class? Do professors want to add a bit of visual footage to a course that isn't on an overhead projector?

Well, the Office of Instructional Development offers a "Video Encyclopedia" to UCLA professors.

The Video Encyclopedia is a series of video volumes containing motion picture film and videotape footage of significant people and events of the 20th century.

The Video Encyclopedia is distributed on 75 one-hour videocassettes — VHS, Beta, or 3/4", or on 38 laser videodiscs. The video volumes comprise a total of 2,217 individual historical events ranging from 1893 through 1985, said Jo Ann Lesser, senior producer-director in charge of Media Production, Office of Instructional Development. Each segment ranges from one to nine minutes and consists of several video excerpts.

The video materials, said Lesser, were taken from newsreel collections from several countries around the world, and from government agencies, presidential libraries, and other private and public collections.

The encyclopedia is a collection of video materials which document the social, political, and cultural history of the 20th

Psych services ready for UCLA students in need

Insights and Options: Student Psychological Services

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first in a series of columns, written by Student Psychological Services, which will appear every other Tuesday.

By Alan Nagamoto

The years you spend at UCLA will probably be some of the most significant in your life, as you will encounter a number of complex demands and challenges, both in and outside the classroom. Deciding on a major and a career path, establishing satisfying relations with peers, becoming more self-sufficient and clarifying values are just some of the vital tasks you will face during your stay here.

This developmental process can be exciting and fulfilling, but it can also be confusing and overwhelming. Students can turn to a number of resources, such as family and friends, but sometimes students do not have supportive resources readily available.

Furthermore, family and friends may not be the most comfortable or most appropriate resources for certain concerns. Student Psychological Services (SPS) is a multidisciplinary mental health center offering a wide range of services designed to support the academic mission of the University.

Established in the early 1950s, SPS is a place you can come to for support and assistance from professional therapists who are knowledgeable about student concerns. Over 3000 students make use of SPS counseling services each year.

Even though our society has become more informed and enlightened about mental health services, there still are some widely-held misconceptions about such services. The following is a clarification of four common misconceptions about SPS services:

1. Only severely disturbed students go to SPS, and if I go there it must mean that I am mentally ill.

The idea that personal counseling is only for the mentally ill is not only antiquated but simply false. If it were true SPS would be out of business, for there aren't very many UCLA students who could be considered mentally ill.

Students who have come to SPS are typically not marginal, inadequate or eccentric either. In fact, students who have utilized SPS tend to be high-functioning individuals who have higher GPA's and are further along in school than those who haven't. It takes strength, not weakness, to recognize and confront difficult issues in one's life.

2. People who go to SPS have unusual problems.

The developmental process during college is universally difficult. People who come to SPS generally do not have peculiar or bizarre problems. In fact, they are your peers who come with concerns that all of us have faced at one time or another.

Many students come to SPS to improve their functioning, not because they have serious problems. If you have not come to SPS because you receive enough support and guidance from family members and friends, that's great. However, if you have avoided SPS because you think it is only for the seriously troubled, you have unnecessarily excluded yourself from a very valuable resource.

3. Therapy takes many years to complete.

There are many approaches to therapy, but most approaches attempt to help the student increase self-awareness and to improve coping skills in specific areas. The goal of therapy is not to attain permanent nirvana, but to assist students in coping successfully with specific developmental tasks.

Modern approaches de-emphasize the importance of unconscious forces and lengthy probing of childhood events and instead emphasize circumscribed problem-solving in the present. Most students who come to SPS are helped in fewer than six visits.

4. My therapist will "fix" me and make me happy.

On the other extreme of misconceptions is the notion that therapy is a mystical and effortless panacea for the human condition. The therapist is not a guru but a caring human being who will listen and be supportive. The therapist is there to help, but the responsibility and motivation for change lie with the student.

No one knows for sure what is therapeutic about therapy, but people often benefit from it as long as they feel comfortable

"The Guard," photograph by legally blind photographer Nazih Rizk.

PHOTOS: Unseen world

After sensing the distance at which his subject is located, Rizk sets the auto-focus by counting the number of clicks his camera makes.

"I focus on the smell of a cigarette, I sense the heat of the sun, or hear the breathing of a man," Rizk said. "I concentrate and I see the surroundings in my mind. I draw in my mind the photograph I want before I ever take it. No, it is not frustrating not to be able to see the picture, because I actually do see exactly what it looks like."

Rizk added that he does not eat, sometimes for one or two days, before taking a picture in order to heighten his senses.

"It takes hours to set up one photograph," he continued. "I concentrate so hard on my senses that sometimes all my energy leaves me and I fall down exhausted." Rizk said that other times he falls because he bumps into a tree or trips.

Rizk used a camera for the first time shortly after losing his sight. "I was blinded at age 16 during a fight at school" Rizk said. "Later I went to London for an operation on my eyes and a friend gave me a camera as a gift, assuming that my vision would be restored. It was not.

"I considered the camera as a daring upon the reality of my situation, and I decided to use the insight which God has given me within my heart in order to take pictures."

"When I was taking my first photograph I felt like a chicken at the point that it is suppose to be killed and sold. But after others saw it and I heard their reaction, I felt like a new baby just out of its mother's womb."

Although certified as absolutely blind, Rizk wears clear glasses because "they are a symbol of a wish to accomplish and succeed."

Far from allowing lack of eyesight to limit him, Rizk describes October 13, 1976, the day God "granted" him absolute blindness, as the turning point of his life. "I bow to blindness because I owe it so much," he said. "And I bow to God. These are the reasons for my success."

Rizk's many honors in the field of photography include a medal from the Kennedy Center of Arts, and a key to the city of Birmingham, Alabama where he represented the Egyptian Government at the city's Festival of Arts. Yet his accomplishments go beyond the spectrum of a camera lens.

Rizk ended his talk Saturday night with one of his favorite sayings, "When a man turns a page in a book he masters the choice and the answer. Whoever of you wants to seek the truth, must first take out his eyes."

Graduate Students, Don't Be Afraid To Give Us The Slip.

Graduate students, don't be shy when it comes to the ASUCLA Book Rebate Program. In the past, a low percentage of graduate students have participated in the program and that means you're not getting your fair share. To get a rebate, simply turn in your colored sales slips from all textbook, general book, magazine and APS purchases before October 23; purchases must be made by October 14. Rebate envelopes and drop boxes are located in all campus students' stores. Book rebates will be mailed in late Spring. Last year the average rebate was more than $28! So this quarter, graduate students, don't keep your slips under wraps. Give us the slip.

More than 400,000 spectators, including this sign-toting enthusiast, were on hand to witness the landing of the space shuttle

SHUTTLE: Edwards air base

a.m. — only three seconds behind schedule — it kicked up a cloud of dust and gave officials of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration the needed confidence to announce a new and ambitious manned space flight program.

NASA's previous shuttle program was halted Jan. 28, 1986, when space shuttle Challenger exploded shortly after liftoff over the coast of Florida. All crew members aboard the shuttle, including a school teacher, were killed.

Future missions planned

For John Kelso, a UCLA senior majoring in biochemistry, Monday's landing was especially rewarding. Kelso has made regular visits to Edwards Air Force Base to watch a half dozen shuttles return from space.

"No matter how many spectators turn out, watching the shuttle land is always exciting," he said. "It's got the same level of energy as a rock concert."

Kelso is such a big fan of NASA's program that he considers himself to be one of the thousands of space shuttle "groupies."

"Even if I had to stay on a mountaintop to see the shuttle land, I think I'd do it," Kelso said. "I know I'd do it — I'm hooked."

Shuttle chief Richard Truly and other NASA officials called the Discovery mission — NASA's 26th in the shuttle program — "an absolutely stunning success."

For NASA's long-term goals, Discovery's four-day, 1.6-million mile mission meant much more. In news conferences after Monday's landing, NASA detailed their reorganized manned space flight program, which top officials believe will pioneer a new era of space exploration, much like the Apollo missions did two decades ago.

News conferences concerning the program are scheduled to continue today.

Truly and other officials said the shuttle program has been reanalyzed, and improvements have been made in management and mission planning to ensure its key role in U.S. space exploration.

"I believe this nation will have the shuttle as the backbone of the space program well into the next century," Truly said. "It's been two-and-a-half years where we couldn't really stand up and say 'it works.' Now we can."

In addition to scientific experiments and satellite repairs, future missions in the shuttle program will install three orbiting telescope observatories. The space telescopes will allow scientists to probe 10 times farther out into the universe compared to any observatory on Earth, said Dr. James Fletcher, a NASA administrator.

A next mission is scheduled for Nov. 17, with Atlantis launching from Kennedy Space Center in Florida.

Fletcher said a task force is re-examining the possibility of allowing non-astronauts — including civilians and payload technicians — to ride on future shuttle missions.

However, "For the next several flights there will be no payload specialists, or civilians," Fletcher said.

Truly, a former astronaut, said that despite NASA's new successes and renewed optimism, the trauma of the Challenger explosion would not be forgotten.

"Even when we've flown a few flights, we are not going to forget the Challenger accident," Truly said. "For the people who work in the program, that's going to stay in their minds for a long time."

Most in poll think U.S. badly managed

7 out of 10 say government corruption is widespread

By Gary Langer
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Americans overwhelmingly believe the federal government is rife with corruption, with seven in 10 saying they think illegal payoffs are common, a Media General-Associated Press poll has found.

A plurality in the national poll said former Attorney General Edwin Meese III should have been charged with crimes, and half opposed a presidential pardon for the highest official charged in the Iran-Contra case, former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter.

Respondents were evenly split on a pardon for Poindexter's assistant, former Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North.

More fundamentally, the poll of 1,125 adults found deep skepticism of the federal government's integrity. Just 40 percent thought of the government as honest overall, while 50 percent said not. The rest didn't know.

An even greater share, 69 percent, said the federal government was poorly managed — and more still, 82 percent, said they were not surprised to learn of recent allegations of payoffs in the awarding of Pentagon contracts.

But the poll's most critical finding was the broad belief that corruption pervades the federal government: Seventy percent said they thought that taking illegal payoffs for special favors was widespread.

That belief carried for majorities of all demographic groups — from a low of 60 percent of Republicans to a high of 82 percent of liberals. Overall, just 20 percent of respondents ,inia$believe payoffs were widespread.

The Reagan administration, however, did not carry heavy blame for the concern over ethics. While 43 percent said the administration had done a bad job of enforcing ethical standards in government, 40 percent said it had done a good job. That was within the poll's three-point margin of error.

There were other signs of good will toward the Reagan administration. Fifty-one percent said it had done a good job of managing the government, even though most said the government was poorly managed overall. And 55 percent did not blame the administration for the Pentagon scandal.

In the Iran-Contra case, Vice President George Bush has said he hopes for an acquittal of North, who with Poindexter is accused of conspiring to sell arms to Iran in exchange for American hostages, and to divert the proceeds to the Nicaraguan rebels. The trial will not take place before the Nov. 8 election.

Fifty percent of the poll's respondents said Poindexter should have been charged; 30 percent said not and the rest didn't know. There was a greater division on North, who gained support through his defense of his actions at congressional hearings last year: Forty-three percent said he should have been charged and 42 percent said not.

The breakdown was the same on whether President Reagan should pardon the men, which he has not ruled out. On Poindexter, half opposed a pardon and 30 percent favored it; on North, 4nrcent were in favor, 44 percent opposed.

Meese, attorney general since 1985, resigned this summer, say-

Close contests in key states major factor in November win

By David Espo
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — George Bush commands an early autumn advantage over Michael Dukakis in the Electoral College, but the campaign for the White House will be decided in a series of close, hard fought contests from California to Connecticut, according to an Associated Press survey of the 50 states.

Republicans sound confident following a strong, late summer surge by Bush. Democrats project concern but say there's ample time to overtake the vice president.

"Dukakis won the primary on his Massachusetts miracle claim, but now people are remembering what government, the economy, was under Jimmy Carter," said Tony Feather, executive director of the Republican Party in Missouri, where the two candidates are rated even.

Said Democratic Rep. Charles Stenholm of Texas, where Dukakis is the underdog: "It's not over yet by any stretch of the imagination. But he's got to go on the offensive" against Bush's charges of liberalism.

The nationwide public opinion surveys indicate a narrow advantage for Bush, although the same surveys show enough undecided and loosely committed voters to alter the outcome of the race at the last moment.

Adding to the uncertainty is a campaign calendar that includes a debate Wednesday between vice presidential candidates Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen, followed by a return engagement between Dukakis and Bush in mid-October. After that comes a three-week sprint to the finish line punctuated by a barrage of television commercials.

Bush appears to be solidifying much of the traditional Republican base across the South and Rocky Mountain West, the survey showed. He is rated the solid leader in Florida with its 21 electoral votes and seems to be opening a little daylight between himself and the Democrats in Texas, although Dukakis is waging an intensive campaign in running mate Lloyd Bentsen's home state. Dukakis is given the edge in several traditional Democratic party strongholds, including New York with its 36 electoral votes, but has not been as successful as Bush in cementing his own political base.

The AP survey of political leaders, independent analysts and public opinion polls in all 50 states turned up frequent expressions of concern among Democrats over the shape of Dukakis' campaign, tempered with hope that the Massachusetts governor may be on the rebound after suffering a political free fall earlier in the campaign.

Republicans who were worried when Bush was down in the polls last summer are smiling at their fortunes now that he is showing surprising strength in states like New

Bond measure would benefit colleges

Prop. 78 raises $600 million for labs, construction

By Kathleen Grubb
Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of articles on November ballot propositions. Tomorrow: Proposition 79.

Propositions '88

SACRAMENTO — Outpaced by a rapidly growing population and a rocket-speed technological revolution, California universities, state and community colleges are turning to a $600 million bond measure to build classrooms and modernize laboratories.

Proposition 78 on the Nov. 8 ballot would authorize the government to sell $600 million in general obligation bonds for construction and remodeling on 135 higher education campuses.

The bond measure marks the second time that California's system of higher education has turned to voters to help pay the costs of its classrooms, libraries and research facilities.

Traditionally, state revenues from tideland oil leases bankrolled much of university and college construction. But declining oil prices dried up that fund at a time when the campuses say their building needs are critical.

Supporters of bond financing say they need the money to renovate aging buildings to make them more earthquake-safe, retrofit science labs with up-to-date equipment, expand crowded libraries and build lecture halls for 1.8 million students on campuses throughout the state, including the California Maritime Academy in Vallejo.

Campuses are cramped for space because construction didn't keep pace with growth in the last decade, said Tom Lassiter, spokesman for the nine-campus University of California.

The UC-Irvine campus sends students across the street to a make-shift lecture hall in a private movie theater, Lassiter said. In Berkeley, the university needs more space to shelve 7 million library books.

More than half the proposed bond money is already spoken for. About $340 million in projects have been approved by the Legislature and governor and are included in the state's 1988-89 budget, pending voter approval.

The Legislature and governor would decide how the remaining money would be divided in 1989-90 between the nine UC campuses, 19 California State University campuses and 106 community colleges.

The bonds would be paid off over a period of about 20 years, with an estimated interest rate of 7.5 percent adding about $475 million to the state.

Opponents raise concerns about California's growing reliance on bond financing, even though a recent legislative analysis said California spends a relatively small share of its budget on its debt service.

"Bonds are a bad way to buy buildings and equipment," said William McCord, author of an argument against Proposition 78 in the ballot pamphlet.

Early polls show support for Proposition 78 is about the same, somewhere between 58 percent and 62 percent, Lassiter said. "There seems to be strong support for higher education in California," he said.

NOMMO: Looking back at its first 20 years

Ivey mounted a campaign against the Daily Bruin for "biased, racist, and inaccurate reporting." Weeks later they negotiated with the Daily Bruin to write a weekly editorial column under the byline of the Chairman of the Blacks Students' Union (BSU). During the winter and spring of 1968, BSU Chairman J. Daniel Johnson wrote these articles. However, many blacks were still unsatisified.

"There still existed traditional barriers and in some cases unoffical prohibitions for the involvement of any significant presence of blacks within the Daily Bruin," says Johnson, who is now president of the UCLA Black Alumni Association.

Unknown to even Johnson at the time, Ardie Ivey and others began talking about developing a paper which addressed issues concerning blacks. They felt the editorial columns in the Daily Bruin "primed the campus for an Afro-American commentary of sort," says Johnson. When Ivey approached Johnson and BSU members with the idea, they threw their support behind it. They immediately began planning to anticipate any possible opposition.

First problem: How to establish a student-run publication at UCLA? Ironically, a former Daily Bruin editor, Neil Reichline, familiarized the NOMMO planning group with the mechanics involved in working with the ASUCLA Communications Board to publish a school paper.

"Neil was a reactionary but this exemplifies a productive Afro-American/Jewish Student Alliance around common interests as opposed to fighting over petty details," says Johnson. That common ground was to promote positive and effective change for a campus that desperately needed it.

The next question: Will the Communications Board be receptive to the idea? Johnson and the BSU realized that to insure success they should not be perceived as the only ones carrying the project. "We knew if we brought it (to the Comm Board) we'd probably hit a reactionary trend and not get it funded." After all, the students did not want the paper to simply be "a diatribe piece for the BSU."

BSU members and UCLA journalism students decided that Andrew Reichline, who was also a Comm Board Member, should introduce the concept to the board.

Next blacks anticipated more opposition — objections from other ethnic groups like "Why them and not us?!". To head off a potential obstacle the students met with other special interest groups, such as MEChA, to assure them that by supporting NOMMO they would be taking a first step towards publishing their own paper.

The players behind NOMMO also anticipated another Comm Board objection and prepared Andrew Reichline for it. Sure enough when one board member said, "Well if we do this we have to do it for everybody." To which Reichline responded, "That's a great idea."

"When we're talking about the history and development of NOMMO, we're talking about the mechanism by which all the special interest papers came to be," says Johnson.

In March of 1968 the Communications Board approved the concept of NOMMO but did not have the money to support it. Anxious to get the paper started Johnson, Ivey, and Andy Reichline committed themselves to find the funds. Lacking any financial support from the "very, very conservative student government" the students found "it necessary to do a lot of things through unusual means," according to Johnson.

One of those means was going to the administration for help. "We felt that Chancellor Franklin Murphy and we were certain that executive vice-chancellor Charles Young would be supportive of it." But who would carry it to the administration? They found a sympathetic ear in the late Dean Charles "Chuck" McClure of the Office of Student Activity (now know as the Center for Student Programming). McClure agreed to carry the paper financially until an adequate amount of funding was provided by the Communications Board.

Black students like Marcia Brown — NOMMO's first editor-in-chief — and Ivan Webster began developing the paper out of Chuck McClure's office. "He was a very nice man who gave his full support to the paper," says Marsallay Spicer (formerly Marcia Brown).

Although NOMMO was considered an element of the Comm Board, Marcia Brown and the first few editors "didn't have any interaction" with the board. It was not until the Communications Board assumed a stronger role a few years later that many students realized that NOMMO was associated with the Comm Board.

By Fall of 1968 the NOMMO editors were ready to create in the words of Daniel Johnson "a newspaper in the best tradition that would promote communication on campus but would speak from the perspective of the Afro-American student."

Whether NOMMO has achieved its goal is the topic the next article of this series.

discussions to find an alternate sponsor for the forum scheduled to be held Oct. 13 or 14 in Los Angeles.

"We are committed to the debate," said Dukakis. "And I'm sure we can go forward, if necessary, with other sponsors."

"We're certain an alternative sponsor will be found," said Sheila Tate, Bush campaign press secretary.

Bush and Dukakis debated Sept. 25 in Winston-Salem, N.C., a confrontation after which both sides said they were pleased with the outcome and neutral observers found no clear winner.

The vice presidential candidates — Republican Dan Quayle and Democrat Lloyd Bentsen — were off the campaign trail, preparing for their debate Wednesday night in Omaha, Neb.

Bentsen was doing his preparation in an Austin, Texas, hotel and during a brief break he told reporters, "I think we're relaxed for it; I think we're ready for it . . . I'm not nervous."

The first presidential debate was sponsored by the Commission on Presidential Debates, a body co-chaired by Paul G. Kirk Jr. and Frank J. Fahrenkopf, the chairmen of the Democratic and Republican parties, respectively.

The League, which was to sponsor the second presidential debate, abruptly withdrew from that role and president Nancy Neuman told a Washington news conference that "we have no intention of becoming an accessory to the hoodwinking of the American people."

Neuman said League officials objected to an agreement reached between the two campaigns which covered all details of the debate.

"The issue is who's in control of the debate," said Neuman.

The agreement between the two campaigns covered such details as the makeup of the panel of questioners, the time the candidates would have for responses, as well as where people would sit in the hall and whether the debaters would sit or stand.

The campaigns worked out similar details between themselves for the first debate and proclaimed all parties pleased with the arrangement.

Brountas said he thought the debate commission was "very pleased" with the way the first debate went.

Tate said she thought most Americans would agree with the campaigns on the issue of control over such details.

Campaigning in Connecticut, Dukakis said, "Mr. Bush offers complacency; I offer change. He gives us slogans; We're offering solutions to the problems American families face every day and every week and every month."

He said he was offering solutions that were "not big-money solutions or big-government solutions."

Get your hands on a Macintosh before your hands are full.

There are only ten weeks between the beginning and the end of Fall Quarter. Ten short weeks to organize and review your notes, complete your research, write your term papers. Already, the work is piling up.

Don't just sit and watch the stacks grow higher. Get yourself some help. Our advice: a Macintosh® computer.

A Macintosh will make an enormous difference in the way you work. Instead of fussing with a typewriter and white-out, you can write and revise on screen — fast. Instead of proofreading with one finger in the dictionary, you can use an automatic spell-checker. Instead of laboriously hand-copying every scribbled note onto an index card, you can use HyperCard, an amazing new program that lets you store, organize, and cross-reference information. (HyperCard is included free with every Macintosh.)

Two days before your first term paper comes due, it might be too late. So don't wait. Come in and get your hands on a Macintosh today. Before Fall Quarter slips completely through your fingers.

Communist Party leader Vladimir V. Shcherbitsky are the only two members of the ruling 12-man party Politburo who were there before Gorbachev took power.

The decision to kick Vorotnikov upstairs could be an indication that he will be removed from the Politburo at a later date.

One Western diplomat in Moscow, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Vorotnikov was considered a "swing" vote on the Politburo. He generally supported Gorbachev's reforms, but was "not real outspoken, cautious, not zealous," the diplomat said.

Vorotnikov was first deputy premier of the Russian republic in 1975-1979, but ran afoul of the Kremlin leadership in the last years of President Leonid I. Brezhnev's reign and was made ambassador to Cuba.

custody of a hostage, an Indian citizen who is a permanent resident of the United States."

She then identified the freed hostage as Singh, a visiting professor at Beirut University College. "We understand the Syrians intend to transport Mr. Singh to Damascus on Tuesday morning," Oakley said.

Asked if there were indications that other hostages would be released, the spokeswoman said: "No. This is all we have."

Singh's wife, Lalmoney, is in Beirut and Singh, 60, will be turned over the U.S. ambassador to Syria, Edward Djerejian, Oakley said.

Although Singh is an Indian citizen, he was considered one of the nine Americans held hostage in Lebanon, she said, adding that he "was associated" with the Americans who taught at the college.

The release came after kidnappers holding Singh and three American teachers said they would free one of their captives at the west Beirut headquarters of the U.N. Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian refugees.

The announcement that a hostage would be freed from Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine came in a 36-word handwritten statement in Arabic delivered to a western news agency in Beirut.

President Reagan created a stir in New York a week ago when he suggested that something was in the works regarding the nine Americans held hostage by various pro-Iranian elements in Lebanon.

He said at the time that he could not say anything further because "you don't talk while a no-hitter is being pitched."

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said later that the president had no special information and was merely saying he didn't want to cast bad luck on the situation.

At the outset of his daily news briefing Monday, Fitzwater disclosed that the administration had received information from a third-party government in the region that a hostage release was imminent. He would not identify the government involved, but Syria's foreign minister spoke of an imminent release.

Neither Reagan nor Fitzwater would speculate on possible motives behind such a hostage release, although both steadfastly denied that the U.S. government had been negotiating to win the liberation of the Americans.

place on either Wednesday or Thursday at 12 noon.

One of the nine other participants will be Midge Costanza, assistant to former president Jimmy Carter, who will speak on "Political Involvement and Well-Being."

In a telephone interview, Costanza said she wanted to examine why people do not participate in the political process and how activism has affected her own life.

"If I am not totally involved with the people around me, I could not feel as good as I could if I were involved," she explained. "Instead of being in reaction, I am in action."

"Government effects every single area of our lives," Costanza continued. "Air, water, war, peace. Government is born from politics. It is as important as decisions like career choice, religion, relationships and education."

Costanza believes that Americans' lack of political participation prevents them from completely living their lives.

"We can turn our back on politicians with the excuse of 'They're all the same, I can't make a difference,'" she said. "But people who say that about politicians feel that in their personal life."

Van Den Bergh believes that the goals of the program "would be for people to acquire information and skills to enhance their well-being," a goal that she believes is in keeping with a university's mission as an educational facility.

Cousins will be speaking Wednesday at noon in the Humanities Conference Room in 314 Royce. For more information call 825-8489.

SHOULD YOU TAKE A BREAK FROM THE PILL?

Some women think they need to take an occasional rest from the Pill. So they switch to a less effective form of birth control, and increase their chances of getting pregnant. Just how restful this can be is highly questionable. What is certain, however, is that there's no medical evidence that supports this notion of taking a break. None.

There are other myths, misconceptions and questions about the Pill. What about the Pill and breast cancer? Although there are conflicting reports concerning this issue, the Centers for Disease Control reported that women who took the Pill—even for 15 years—ran no higher risk of breast cancer than the women who didn't. They also reported that ovarian and uterine cancer are substantially less common among women on the Pill. What's more, Pill users are less likely to develop pelvic inflammatory disease (tubal infections), benign breast disease, and iron deficiency anemia—not to mention menstrual cramps.

And the rumor that the Pill makes you less fertile is just that. Rumor. Studies indicate that if you were fertile before you took the Pill, taking it should not affect your ability to have children later. Some women may experience a short period of readjustment after discontinuing the Pill. But even so, they usually become pregnant soon.

So does the Pill have any real risks? Yes. And you should know what those risks are. For example, if you are taking the Pill, you should not smoke. Especially if you're over 35. Cigarette smoking is known to increase the risk of serious and possibly life-threatening adverse effects on the heart and blood vessels from Pill use. What's more, women with certain conditions or medical histories should not use the Pill. Even if you're already on the Pill, you should see your doctor at least once a year. And be sure to read the patient information that's included in every Pill package.

When it comes to birth control, the best advice is to seek out the best advice. Go to reliable sources. Ask a lot of questions. Discuss all the options with your doctor.

Because only then will you know where the myth ends. And the truth begins.

Brocato

Laurence J. Rittenband sentenced him for a single count. Rittenband said the multiple rapes, occurring consecutively, constituted a single act. If Brocato had been sentenced separately for his acts, he could have received up to 20 years in jail.

According to police reports filed after the rape, the victim was attacked on the second floor of the library, where she was studying alone. Brocato forced her into an empty study room and raped her.

By matching fingerprints found at the crime site, UC Police Department officers located Brocato at his job in Century City. They arrested him there on Oct. 22 and, on Sept. 16 he was convicted by a jury of two men and 10 women after a three-day trial. He had pleaded "not guilty."

Police give tips to avoid rape

UC Police Detective Mike Shain advised students to study in crowded areas, watch their surroundings and work with a companion to help prevent rape.

Crimes can occur anywhere, he warned, and students must always be careful.

Shain said there is no "right" way to react to rape. He explained that only a victim can decide whether to try to overpower attackers, or to remain calm — as was the woman attacked in the University Research Library.

ing he had been vindicated of corruption allegations by a special prosecutor's decision not to seek charges against him. The prosecutor said Meese probably violated tax laws and conflict of interest laws, but did not file charges because he had no evidence Meese sought personal gain.

In the survey, however, 46 percent said Meese should have been charged with crimes, to 30 percent who agreed with the decision not to charge him. The remainder, 23 percent, had no opinion.

Republicans were the strongest supporters of North, Poindexter and Meese, with Democrats the greatest critics and independents more divided. On ethics and management as well, Republicans strongly supported the administration and most Democrats rated it poorly. Most independents said the administration had done well on management, but they were split on ethical enforcement.

York, Pennsylvania and Iowa that figured to be among his weakest.

The Electoral College lineup looks like this:

■ Bush's strongest region is probably the South, where he leads almost everywhere. Bentsen's presence on the ticket almost guarantees a close race in Texas, however, and Dukakis has strong support in North Carolina and border states such as Arkansas, Kentucky and Tennessee.

■ California and Washington on the West Coast are rated as tossups, with Dukakis given the edge in Oregon. Bush appears to have firmed up support in traditional Republican states such as Utah, Idaho and Wyoming, but the Dukakis campaign says it has strength in New Mexico and Montana.

■ Farm states such as Kansas and Nebraska are leaning to Bush, while Dukakis harbors hope for the Dakotas. Dukakis is favored in Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota in the upper Midwest. Dukakis has no hopes for Quayle's home state of Indiana. The Democrat seems to have a slight edge in Illinois, but Democrats concede he is probably slightly behind in Ohio and Missouri. Republicans see a narrow advantage in Michigan.

■ The Northeast is Dukakis' strongest region, and despite closer-than-expected public polls, he is regarded as the likely winner at home in Massachusetts as well as New York, Rhode Island, Maryland and West Virginia. Vermont and Maine appear to be close, and New Hampshire is Bush territory.

'Us versus them' attitude obscures the goal of student publications

By Robert J. O'Connor

There appears to be a prevailing attitude on campus of late which follows this line of thought — "if you're not with us, then you must be against us." Such sentiment is evident in the latest column written by Adriana Manjarrez appearing in the viewpoint section of the Daily Bruin Registration Issue. Apparently, certain members of the student media were upset by a particular vote which I took as part of the ASUCLA Communications Board (the publisher of the Daily Bruin, six special interest papers, a yearbook, and a radio station). Prior to the vote I was quoted as saying, "What if I disagree," to which there was a response, "Then you will confirm all of our suspicions (that you are generally in opposition to student publications other than the Daily Bruin)." Being so accused, I will endeavor to explain the state of student media as I view it as a former Daily Bruin managing editor and current Undergraduate Representative to the Comm Board.

As correctly stated in the Manjarrez column, the Special Interest Papers (SIPs) face a situation of economic discomfort. On face value it can be upheld that the SIPs are not currently self-sufficient; that is, without supplemental sources of funding they cannot sustain their publications. And consequently, given the university's trend of cutting registration fee support, the future of these publications could be threatened. This situation brings us to the fateful issue. As a member of Comm Board, I supported a move which was intended to enhance the advertising viability and professionalism of these publications. It was proposed that if the SIPs would guarantee the publication dates of their issues, then the Comm Board would pay for their overhead expenses (minus maintenance and utility). In essence, this proposal offered the opportunity to recoup "lost" money. The SIP editors did not support this proposal, and in the final vote neither did the Comm Board. Instead, the board decided to pay for the overhead costs with no strings attached — no guarantee. Needless to say, I voted against this measure. But the truth of the matter is that I couldn't care less whether these publications come out on time (or not), or whether they exist (or not); it makes no difference to me one way or the other. Yet this does not preclude my acting (voting) in the manner which I determine as best for these publications. And this is precisely what I have done.

But what is the Comm Board's responsibility to the associated students and other components of the university population? I submit that the Comm Board's mission is to ensure the means to attain the highest quality product of all its media. I freely admit that I am primarily concerned with how Comm Board's decisions affect the Daily Bruin. This year the Comm Board is scheduled to receive $64,900 of registration fee support. Yet the Comm Board will spend, either directly or indirectly, considerably more than this amount on the six SIPs, and other perennial money-losing ventures such as the yearbook and the radio station. The Daily Bruin inevitably covers the excess cost. Yet the Daily Bruin does not have the moral obligation to provide the sustenance for any other medium. Quite the contrary, the Comm Board is remiss in its duties when it allows funds to be drained from the Daily Bruin. Every dollar diverted from the Daily Bruin decreases the potential of the campus newspaper.

Finally, I would like to end from where I began. Despite the "us versus them" mentality prevalent among many people at UCLA, the world is much more complex. In failing (or refusing) to comprehend the subtlety of the matter, these people will fail to make progress toward their goals.

O'Connor, a junior majoring in political science, is a member of the ASUCLA Communications Board.

The Midnight Economist

Which came first: handgun ownership or violent crime?

William Allen

Everyone understands — sort of — the riddle of the chicken and the egg. But when it comes to guns and crime, thinking is really scrambled.

The media emphasize only one possible causal sequence: guns precede crime. Widespread gun ownership allegedly is a major cause of crime, and gun control is required to reduce crime.

But what if the sequence is the other way, and ownership of guns is largely a response — wven an effective response — to crime? Such is the case argued by David P. Kopel, a past district attorney in New York City.

Most Americans, Mr. Kopel suggests, know they cannot always count on police protection. They can dial 911, but requests for help often produce tardy responses — or none. And because courts have ruled that governments, even when negligent, are not liable for failing to protect citizens from crime, many seek substitutes for police protection. One substitute has been ownership of guns.

The conspicuous shotgun, which makes big noise and spews pellets over a wide pattern, has some attraction for protection. But Mr. Kopel holds that "handguns are particularly well-suited for self-defense, because they are smaller and hence more maneuverable than long guns. They are also harder for an attacker to take away, and their lesser recoil makes them easier . . . to handle."

But a common objection to handguns is that, through careless or panicky use and accidents, they produce more mischief and misery than they prevent. It is true that if civilians shoot a gun, they are more likely than police to hit innocent people. But when used defensively, guns are usually brandished, not shot. And more people die in bicycle accidents than in gun accidents.

Most gun owners are responsible, and the result of ownership has been less, not more, crime. A study by the National Crime Survey found that when victims resist robbers with a gun, a dramatic reduction occurs in the rate of success by robbers and in the rate of injury of victims.

Another study, by the National Institute of Justice, concluded that 40 percent of prison inmates had aborted their crimes after discovering their victims were armed. More than half of the imprisoned felons included in a Justice Department survey agreed that "most criminals are more worried about meeting an armed victim than they are about running into police." When the police trained many women in Orlando, Florida, how to use guns, the number of rapes and burglaries plummeted.

These findings are not surprising. Possession of guns by potential victims increases the cost of crime to criminals and thereby reduces the profitability of crime. As a result, individuals choose to commit fewer crimes, seeking instead more legitimate alternatives for obtaining income.

It appears that general gun ownership is more consequence than cause of crime. And if ownership of guns yields less crime, then abolition of gun ownership will yield more crime. ■

Allen, a UCLA professor of economics, is vice president of the Institute for Contemporary Studies.

USAC's new budget reveals the council's bias and elitism

Editor:

I was appalled to hear of USAC's 1988-1989 budget appropriations (Bruin, Sept. 26-29). Dishing out cuts of 46 percent to the Black Student Alliancé, 30 percent to MEChA, 30 percent to GALA, 22 percent to the Asian Pacific Coalition, 3 percent to JSU, 47 percent to Academic Affairs, 29 percent to Campus Events, 35 percent to Cultural Affairs and 14 percent to Community Service in order to raise the Interfraternity Council's budget and the Panhellenic Council's budget by 72 percent and 67 percent respectively is inexcusable and reeks of political favoritism regardless of USAC's claims that the appropriations were fair and sprung from a "zero-based" budgeting procedure.

Exclusivity and elitism are understandable — albeit unconscionable — within the Greek system; feeling that you belong at the expense of someone else who is labeled an "other" is what being in a fraternity or sorority is all about. However, they are unforgivable in the context of UCLA as a whole.

Some of us wonder how allegations of racism spring up on campus. USAC's budget is a case in point of the basis of these allegations. On Tuesday, October 4, there will be a Senate hearing on racism in the faculty building behind Murphy Hall from 10:00 to 3:00. Come and voice your opinion on the budget or other relevant issues!

What's with the special treatment?

Editor:

Every time I pay my reg. fees, I ask myself the same question; why CalPIRG? Why do I have the option to give or not to give a portion of my reg. fees to CalPIRG, but no say in the remaining $497? I rarely use the Wooden Center, and I should have the ability to initial a box and not give my $5 that normally goes to the Wooden Center, and be able to allocate it toward the seismic restructuring in Ackerman Union, which I do use regularly, or give it to no one at all.

Don't get me wrong. I support CalPIRG 100 percent and have never initialed the box to disallow my $2 donation. My gripe is that my remaining $497 is given to organizations who, first of all, I don't support, and secondly, I don't even know about. So I ask myself again, why CalPIRG? It makes sense to me to standardize the process and treat each organization equally. Either I should have the option to authorize or not authorize each allocation of my reg. fees, or such payment should be made mandatory, with each organization automatically receiving their respective share of my reg. fees, including CalPIRG.

Sensational Mormon murders become hot topic in books and broadcast

By William Quinn
Senior Staff Writer

■ BOOK: A Gathering of Saints. By Robert Lindsey. Simon & Schuster. $18.95. 380 pp.

Author Robert Lindsey, who previously documented the Christopher Boyce case (The Falcon and The Snowman), has now done to the Mormon Church what he did for TRW.

Several years ago the Los Angeles Times gave extensive and prominent coverage to a fewly discovered venerable document, "The Salamander Letter," a communication from one of the early disciples of Mormon founder Joseph Smith. The letter detailed how the "Angel Moroni" had first led Joseph Smith to the golden plates from which the Book of Mormon was transcribed.

Many non-Mormons noted the controversy surrounding Radical shrink J. M. Masson scorches profession's idols

By William Quinn
Senior Staff Writer

■ BOOK: Against Therapy. By Jeffrey Moussaieff Masson, Ph.D. Atheneum; $18.95; 279 pp.

This book is a scorcher — to the psychoanalytic profession — and I love it!

According to the dust jacket, "In 1981, Jeffrey Moussaieff Masson was fired from his position as projects director of the Sigmund Freud Archives, shortly after suggesting that Freud had intentionally suppressed a key finding . . . the so-called seduction theory."

Masson's claim — and the enormously controversial book, The Assault on Truth, in which he put (his thesis) forward — became front-page news. Masson's research led him to question not only the history of psychoanalysis, but . . . its very premise.

His new book, Against Therapy, is after all not some screed from the crackpot Scientologists who regularly rail against and trash UCLA NPI. This book is not a paperback Dianetics hawked on T.V. for $4.95.

Well-respected Atheneum is the hardcover publisher, and the reviews have appeared in Songs about love, socialism

Bragg, Shocked thrill crowd at Wiltern

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

■ CONCERT: Billy Bragg, Michelle Shocked, Mancotal. At Wiltern Theater, Western and Wilshire, Los Angeles. Oct. 1, 1988.

Socialism is no longer a dirty word. That's how it felt recently at the Wiltern theater, as singer-songwriters Billy Bragg and Michelle Shocked dispelled doubts in a politically-tinged evening that was by turn angry, humorous and moving — but always heartfelt and passionate.

Cynics who have never heard Englishman Billy Bragg may dismiss his message as self-serving propaganda. But those who have know better.

Sure, Bragg sings very strongly about leftist politics. But his politics are never removed from the real world — because they always relate to real human beings and real feelings.

Bragg is convincing because he sings about himself. He succeeds in avoiding sentimentality or trite, tedious rhetoric. Ultimately, Bragg's remarkably personal songs are not about rigid, doctrinaire politics, but about human beings interacting with each other.

"Socialism at its bottom is love," Bragg explained to the audience as to why so many of his songs paradoxically deal with the subject of love. "If you have never loved someone with all your heart, or let yourself be loved by another, you can never be a socialist."

Bragg's song "Days like These" is a moving message to follow one's heart. "Ideologies of the left and right are important, but what's most important is people and the happiness of people," he said.

Attacking his battered electric guitar and bellowing in his raw Cockney accent, the 30-year old Bragg came on like a modern-day punk-rock version of Woody Guthrie — the great American populist composer who wrote "This Land is Your Land" — blasting the evils of capitalist expansion and corporate exploitation, while conveying his Utopian, socialist vision of the world. Billy Bragg is a socialist, and he's damn proud of it. In a world weary with compromise, hypocrisy and sell-outs, Bragg is a refreshing, vivifying presence.

The performance bristled with Bragg's on-target comments ranging from Jackson, Bush and Dukakis to AIDS, socialism and religion ("You cannot be a Christian and a capitalist at the same time").

The songs performed ranged from the political "Waiting for the Great Leap Forward" to the wrenching "Valentine's Day," delineating the everyday incidence of domestic violence. "Tender Comrade" is about the deep bonds of friendship that soldiers in armies come to share, destroying the "macho bullshit" illusion that we're fed by the media. "Power in the Union" was dedicated to the striking grape workers in California.

Bragg saved his strongest words for the upcoming election in November. He urged everybody to vote, imploring people to maintain a global perspective. "The world is bigger than the World Series," he said.

Before Bragg, folk singer Michelle Shocked charmed the audience in a gleaming performance, dressed simply in black sweats. Playing her acoustic guitar, Shocked sang most of the songs from her provocative new album Short Sharp Shocked.

Shocked showed an equal facility for clear vocals and words, with her strong voice and deceptively simple lyrics in songs about growing up in East Texas, the annual "Yamboree" featuring her county's famed sweet potatoes, running away from home, and of social conscience in the tradition of Bob Dylan's "The Lonesome Death of Hattie Carroll."

Shocked's humor is not the least of her assets. The skinny,

Geoffrey Gilmore of UCLA's T.V. and Film Archives.

MELNITZ: Documentaries

Oscar nominations in recent years have increased dramatically and we were faced with too few program time slots. We've redirected the Academy/UCLA documentary series to serve as a showcase for other outstanding work still hampered by limited public exposure,'' said Academy President Richard Kahn.

Geoffrey Gilmore, Director of Programming for the Archives since 1980, said that the films were chosen based on a ''certificate of merit'' idea. ''We're trying to point towards documentaries that are not simply those that were nominated or that have won Academy Awards,'' he said.

''Regularly, there is no place to see a documentary except on television and even on television, it's usually limited to PBS. This (the documentary series) is one of the few opportunities to show that documentaries get to be screened. That's very unfortunate given the number of documentaries made, the quality of them, the broad range in subject matter, etc . . . '' said Gilmore, who received his Master's in film criticism from UCLA.

There is no theme binding the entire series — the series' subject matter ranges from Chuck Berry in the 1987 film Chuck Berry Hail! Hail! Rock 'n' Roll to ecology in A Thousand Cranes, a 1986 film by Brian Kahn. However, films with common ground are paired for an evening's screening.

In addition to joining films thematically, the Archives and the Academy decided to combine a feature and a short film. ''What we're doing, in almost all cases, is trying to make programs of reasonable length, so, probably, we'll program a short and feature together,'' said Gilmore.

The series begins tonight with two films about Third World politics: Trader (1987), produced by Patrice Samara, and The Global Assembly Line (1986), made by Lorraine Gray.

SHOCKED: Sharp songs

ghostly Shocked proved endearing, singing about how she learned to drive her car, how she and her friend put fires to haystacks for fun, ''spreading fear of arson among the neighbors.''

No one escapes Shocked's funny put-downs. ''Campus Crusade'' knocks the ''evangelical poetry'' of Brother Jed and his wife Sister Cindy: ''With you campus crusaders in Heaven, I think Hell is gonna be just swell.''

Her most affecting song was ''Graffiti Limbo,'' about Michael Stewart, the black graffiti artist in New York who was strangled to death while in police custody.

She ended with two memorable numbers from her album: ''Anchorage,'' a bittersweet song about an old friend who moved to Alaska; and the bluesy ''If Love was a Train.''

Shocked and Bragg were preceded by Mancotal, a seven-piece band from Nicaragua. The audience enthusiastically received the band's sunny Marimba beat and striking Nicaraguan folk songs.

The bandleader emphasized that they ''wanted to build a country without doors, without windows, without bars, without jails.'' After Bragg finished his set with ''Route 813,'' an Anglified version of the American road classic ''Route 66,'' Mancotal came out to join him for the scintillating encore ''Banana.''

In their concert, Bragg, Shocked and Mancotal proved the impossible: that politics can be fun, too. You can indeed be committed and party hard.

FATE revives banned 'Suicide' from Russia

■ THEATER: Nikolai Erdmen's The Suicide. At FATE (Friends and Artists Theatre Ensemble), 1761 N. Vermont in Hollywood. 8 P.M. Friday and Saturday. Free parking available behind building. Call (213)466-1767 for ticket information.

Mikhail Gorbachev's Glasnost and FATE — the Friends and Artists Theatre Ensemble — have combined forces to bring a theatrical gem to Los Angeles.

Nikolai Erdmen's The Suicide was banned while still in rehearsal in the Soviet Union in 1932. The satire examines society's manipulations of a man's contemplated suicide. It is also an existentialist study of human life and death.

As Semyon Semyonovich Podsekainikov, Michael Nehring delivers a convincing portrayal of a man who has lost control of his life, and who is searching for a justification for his life and death.

His frustration stems from the fact that in a society where a permit is needed to get a job, ''the unemployed are not allowed to work.''.

Semyon then becomes obsessed with learning the tuba as a way to escape his poverty. However, when his instruction book — promising to teach him how to learn to play inexpensively — ends up requiring the possession of a piano, his life loses all hope.

The village hears of his decision to end it all. Everyone from the intelligentsia to the church to the village madam wants him to leave a note saying he killed himself for their cause.

Sterling performances by Michael Nehring as the would-be-suicide, Darcy Marta as his distraught wife, and Lisa Thayer as the mother-in-law who is a constant crutch for her daughter, provide the foundation on which the rest of the performances rely. Other notable performances are given by Michael David Simms as the next-door neighbor looking for ways to get ahead, and Mitchell Young Evans as the staunch supporter of the Party and government regulations.n

In his first American production, Florinel I. Fatulescu — an award-winning director who immigrated from Romania last year — offers direction that is subtle yet keeps the story moving forward. The audience is aware of Semyon's confusion and the constant action on stage echoes Semyon's multitude of choices to be made. The lighting and costuming add texture and finish to the production.

Be prepared to sit for a long time: the first act lasts almost 2 hours. But it's worth the marathon sitting contest.

FATE is a small theater. The house seats 48 people, and it is a completely different atmosphere in which to see a play. You are greeted with coffee and lemonade. At the intermission there are complimentary cakes and beverages.

Therapy

Time and The New York Times. Author Masson is a Harvard Ph.D. who renounced psychiatric practice in the same spirit that animal lovers have renounced McDLT's.

Most impressively after his credentials and background, Masson presents fresh self-translations of the letters and diaries of Freud and Jung as well as early case histories from the famous Swiss clinic "Bellevue." Then, armed with damning quotes, he compares them with the standard English translations which have distorted the intent and methods of the founders of modern practice.

Hardly anyone — including Carl Jung and especially proponents of the new trendy forms of therapy, like Transactional, Feminist, Ericksonian Hypnotherapy and Eclecticism — emerges unscathed.

Masson's theme emerges clearly: that therapy is actually coercion to a society-approved, always conservative point-of-view. Patients — human mavericks — are beaten, shocked and tortured into submission. Standards of preparation in the profession and self-policing policies are shockingly deficient, according to Masson. Human power is the name of the game, and brutality and sexual abuse are rife and swept under the rug. Moreover, the bulk of the population has come to see the profession as godlike and its whims and injustices are insanely catered to. High fees are contradiction and extortion.

Extensive documentation from real testimony appearing in court records is here. One of the profession's heroes of the past two decades is exposed as typical (others are cited, too): the notorious John Rosen who surrendered his license in 1983. Masson scores big after recounting how the physical and sexual abuse at Rosen's clinic contributed to the deaths and suicides among his patients. Then Masson lets us know that in 1971, Rosen was Psychiatry's "Man of the Year" and his articles are still being published as authority in psychiatric journals and standard texts.

One of the best and certainly most controversial chapters recounts how Jung embraced the Nazis and wrote editorial copy at the direction of Goebbles for the foremost German psychiatric journal during World War II. Masson's point is that most practitioners have blinded themselves to the contradictions of selling out their patients in the guise of treating them.

The Bellevue section is particularly illuminating. Over decades, rich middle-class industrialists sent their daughters there for displaying some form of independence, like wanting educations.

Masson uses this ancient scandal as a metaphor for modern practice and declares that the charging of high fees today discredits the entire underlying theory.

It must be noted that Masson's Ph.D. is in Sanskrit. However, his bio goes on to say that he was clinically trained in psychoanalysis at the Toronto Psychoanalytic Institute from 1970-78, graduating as a psychoanalyst and member of the International Psychoanalytical Association in 1978. Also, he was briefly projects-director of the Sigmund Freud Archives, a director of the Sigmund Freud Copyrights and had a private psychotherapeutic/analytic practice in Toronto and Berkeley.

Ultimately, Masson's thesis is based in pure politics — not the Republican/Democratic kind, but the kind that refers to pure power among human beings. " . . no therapy can be value free, and . . no psychotherapist can avoid instilling or attempting to instill his or her values in patients," declares Masson in his concluding chapter.

Of course, the mentally ill can not be left to their own devices and destruction, but it is clear that psychiatry must constantly be re-examined as to its worth and methods. Masson makes a good point that for too long we have allowed the practice to continue unexamined and unregulated. Of course he goes radically in the opposite direction, but it is healthy to have his point of view to pull the compass needle back toward the middle.

Mormon

the document which centered upon its scandalous revelations which temporarily overshadowed questions about its authenticity — did it establish by a contemporary that Smith had been a religious con-man? We decided to wait for more details before being caught up in these complicated, romantic notions. Within a year, three bombings resulting in two deaths occurred in Salt Lake — somehow connected to The Letter. Rumors flew that they were the work of "forgers" or else a Mormon hit squad dedicated to smiting the enemies of the righteous.

The events earned small stories in the national newspapers and magazines like Newsweek. Suddenly, in the wake of the solution to the mystery, the story is the hottest property in publishing and broadcasting. At least three books are out — Lindsey's, The Mormon Murders by Steven Naifeh and Gregory White Smith, and Salamander by Linda Sillitoe and Allen Roberts. Film and T.V. producers are also rushing to exploit the story. ABC will present a short documentary this Fall; CBS plans a miniseries for the Spring; and 20th-Century Fox will open a feature film next Fall.

In publishing, The Mormon Murders is considered to be a wholesale attack on the Church, while Salamander is judged to be an apology for the Church (by no less than the L.A. Times in the Sunday Calendar of Sept. 18).

Lindsey's book is supposed to be the fairest, somewhere in the middle. The author recounts how, in the early 1980s, one Mark Hoffman, a Mormon Salt Lake City rare-document trader, began to have unbelievable luck in tracking down early Mormon hagiography, some of it with great potential for damage to the legitimacy of the Utah Church. (It had rivals for direct line of descendence from Joseph Smith with a "Reorganized" church back East founded by Smith's direct descendants.)

Over several years, dealing directly with the top rank of the Mormon Church — in itself astounding — Hoffman began selling these letters and affidavits for princely sums, to be locked up in Church vaults to be suppressed. One, of course, was the Salamander Letter, detailing particularly colorful, direct evidence of faddish (1830s) necromancy and divination in finding the legendary golden plates.

In the middle of further furious wrangling over more stacks of ancient papers, purported by rumor to be even

The story is the hottest property in publishing and broadcasting wilder derogations of the characters of Smith and the other Mormon patriarch, Brigham Young, the bombs struck downtown Salt Lake City, killing and injuring some of the principals in the trading.

Although one of dead seemed to be an innocent bystander, she was the middle-aged wife of one of the money people. Hoffman was one of the maimed, seeming to lead the trail away from him. Mafia money was said to be involved. Other group suspects were the legendary Mormon Danites who, a hundred years ago, had run down and lynched Mormon heretics.

Astoundingly, Hoffman was arrested, tried and convicted for the bombings, including the one which maimed him. Eventually he confessed to the diabolical forgeries he had perpetrated — practically every document he ever sold.

There are three absolutely fascinating elements that make up the tale: the murders and motive; the method of forgeries and sale; and most valuably in the long run, the background history of the Mormon Church that makes all the rest intelligible.

Lindsey gets an 'A' for background. What has always been purposefully vague is suddenly crystal clear about the beginnings of the Church of the Latter Days Saints in American history. Considering the importance of Utah and the Mormon influences in business, finance and politics, this historical realization of the sort of thing that Jim Jones would have like to have accomplished is important information.

The details of the forgeries are also well recounted. It is only in the contemporary story that Lindsey falls down somewhat. Perhaps he needed a Cast of Characters like translations of Russian novels, but to the uninitiated, who-everybody-is-in-the-tale can be very confusing. This irritating failure, however, is actually poor writing — a simple lack of memorable characterization which could have been remedied by a little more thorough application. Lindsey's mistake is having gotten so close to those involved that he forgot how well they need to be brought to life to make them vivid.

Thus, especially in the early chapters, unless you have already followed the story, you will find yourself reading and rereading key sections to remind yourself who's who.

But the effort is worthwhile and the book is gripping, because the tale is fool-proof. Most people have stayed up all night with it once having gotten their hands on it. It is a good mystery as well as good history.

Orel, Doc square off in NL playoff opener

By Jim Donhghy
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES — For the Los Angeles Dodgers to beat the New York Mets in the National League playoffs, it will take some strong-armed tactics.

In head-to-head competition this season, the Mets beat the Dodgers 10 of 11 games and outscored them 49-18.

"They have an outstanding team and are strong in every area," Dodgers manager, Tom Lasorda said. "But we have outstanding pitching, too."

Lasorda will go with his best arm, right-hander Orel Hershiser, in Game 1 of the playoffs Tuesday night at Dodger Stadium against Dwight Gooden, 18-9.

Hershiser, 23-8, finished the season with 59 consecutive scoreless innings to break Don Drysdale's 20-year-old record.

"I started to think about the Mets as far back as the night right after I got the record," Hershiser said. "The Mets have always been more important to me than the streak, because of the fact that that was a team-related thing."

Hershiser's last defeat was a 2-1 setback by the Mets on Aug. 24 at Dodger Stadium. He pitched a complete game and allowed seven hits.

The Mets and Dodgers had an afternoon workout at Dodger Stadium Monday. The Mets left for the coast Sunday evening after beating St. Louis 7-5 in the regular-season finale for their 100th victory.

Rookie Tim Belcher, 12-6, says watching Hershiser has been an inspiration to the rest of the staff.

"It's a thing that snowballs," Belcher said of the Dodgers' excellent pitching of late. "With (John) Tudor, Orel and (Tim) Leary throwing all these shutouts this season and lately, everybody just takes the field and expects a line of goose eggs."

Hershiser finished the season with a 2.26 earned run average and struck out 178 batters.

In six career starts at Dodger Stadium, Gooden is 4-0 with an 0.32 ERA.

"I like the mound at Dodger Stadium," Gooden said. "It's high and firm and you seem closer to the batter."

"It should be a low-scoring series and the team that scores first will have a big advantage," Gooden said.

The Mets scored the first run in seven of the 11 games with the Dodgers and five of the six at Dodger Stadium.

"The first game is very important," Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez said. "If we can beat them and Hershiser, it will have to make them think. But if they win, it would help their confidence against us."

Gooden was 3-0 against the Dodgers this season. In 35 1-3 innings he allowed 25 hits and six runs while striking out 22.

The Dodgers will pitch John Tudorni against David Cone. Tudor suffered muscles spasms in his hip Friday night and is a question mark.

Cone, 20-3, won his last eight decisions, and has a 2.22 ERA and 213 strikeouts in 231 innings.

On May 22 in Los Angeles, Cone beat the Dodgers 5-2 and also was part of a bench-clearing brawl. Ron Darling, 17-9, is scheduled to start Game 3 when the playoffs shift to Shea Stadium on Friday night. Former Met Tim Leary or Belcher will start for the Dodgers. Leary has been in a slump of late, allowing 23 earned runs in his last 40 1-3 innings.

UCLA can nominate three students for the 1989 national competition. The Truman Foundation will make final selections and will award 105 Scholarships in April 1989. In order to be considered for nomination, a student must

A's head to Boston

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

BOSTON — Roger Clemens and the Boston Red Sox hit golf balls while the Oakland Athletics hit the road Monday, two days before the start of the American League playoffs.

"This is a good way to relax. No one can get me on the telephone and no one can find me, especially where some of my drives go," Clemens said during a celebrity tournament sponsored by former Boston star Carl Yastrzemski.

Outfieldlder Dwight Evans and pitcher Bob Stanley also took part in the tournament, played on a sunny afternoon.

Boston manager Joe Morgan, however, was hoping for a ton of rain." He wanted to spend the day picking mushrooms near his home.

"You've got to do it right after a heavy rain, no other time," Morgan said. He said determining the difference between the poisonous and non-poisonous variety is difficult.

"It can be a tough call. It's like when you're waiting for that slider and the heater comes right for the coconut," he said. "That's a tough call."

The Athletics spent the day flying across the country and Oakland manager Tony La Russa anticipated some tough choices for Game 1 Wednesday afternoon. Dave Parker and Glenn Hubbard are ailing and may not be able to start.

"We may go down to the wire on those," La Russa said. "The answer might not come until we see what happens in Tuesday's workout."

The Red Sox and Athletics planned afternoon practices at Fenway Park, although rainy weather was in the forecast.

Boston is rated a slight favorite in the best-of-seven series, although many of the numbers point to the Athletics. Oakland won nine of 12 games against the Red Sox this season, including all six on the West Coast.

The Athletics won 104 games, most by an AL West team since the division was formed in 1969, while Boston's 89 victories are the fewest ever by an AL East club for a full season.

The Red Sox finished poorly, losing six of the last seven games.

"Now we have another challenge in front of us; it's David against Goliath, said Boston's Marty Barrett. "They're the big guys, but when David and Goliath met, David won."

Night Editors

The Bruin needs several people with experience in newspaper production to night edit several times per week during the academic year. Night editors receive a fixed sum for approximately five hours of work each night. Those interested should bring a resume or list of relevant experience to the Bruin office in 112 Kerckhoff Hall.

Henley

"I was worried the whole game. Someone asked me if I thought the punt return broke their back, but not a team like Nebraska. You won't break their back and don't ever think you will," he said emphatically.

Regardless, Henley now has three career punt returns for touchdowns, and is within one of tying Sam Brown's career record in that category. Brown returned three for touchdowns in 1954, another record Henley has a shot at.

Henley is quick to point out that the entire punt return unit deserves praise.

After his touchdown against San Diego State, Henley went so far as to say, "I'm not taking credit for this one. There were a lot of great blocks." The theme continued after the Nebraska game, when Henley insisted that the way his teammates blocked, "they could have brought a fan out of the stands and let him run it back."

Henley was named Pac-10 Conference special teams player of the week in each of the first two weeks and defensive player of the week this week, and leads the nation in punt returns with an average of 29.1 yards a return (7 returns for 204 yards). He is third on the all-time UCLA punt return list with 573 career yards behind Ernie Johnson (632) and Ron Carver (606).

"Records are nice honors," Henley said, "but if they come, they come. I'm more excited about our punt return team. I'll appreciate the records somewhere down the line, but right now you can't just rely on what you've done."

Henley comes from a football family. His older brother, Thomas, was an outstanding running back at Stanford (All-Pac-10 in 1980-81, third on the career rushing chart with 4,169 yards), while his younger brother, Eric, is a redshirt freshman at Rice.

Eric, incidentally, is eighth in the nation in punt returns, which prompted Darryl to laugh, "My little brother. . .it took me five years to be No. 1, and he's already on the list."

Henley noted that when it was time to sign his letter of intent, he nearly changed his plans from UCLA to Stanford. Henley says that growing up in Texas he had been a Baylor fan, but after moving to Ontario, he was a Bruin fan from his mid-teens on. However, a late recruiting trip to the Farm nearly changed his mind.

"I had committed to UCLA, but I had a good time at Stanford and I told the coaches that I just wanted to be sure," Henley recalled. "The reason I came (to UCLA) is because I wanted to play in the Rose Bowl, and I admired Don Rogers, Kenny Easley and Lupe Sanchez (all former UCLA standout defensive backs)."

Part of Henley's family now is his fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha. Teammates Carnell Lake and Mike Farr are also Alphas. "My fraternity brothers give me a lot of support," Henley said. "They're always at the games, and it's great to have guys like that."

Looking at the rest of the season, Henley sees plenty of challenges looming ahead in the Pac-10 schedule.

"The Pac-10 produces a lot of good quarterbacks. There's Troy Taylor of Cal, Bill Musgrave of Oregon, he's a great quarterback. People underestimate him but don't forget Erik Wilhelm of Oregon State. Then there's running quarterbacks like Ronnie Veal and Bobby Watters of Arizona and Timm Rosenbach of Washington State. They run the ball well.

"It's going to be stiff every week, it's going to be hard. It's going to be a really tough challenge," Henley said. "The Pac-10 is the best conference right now."

Henley sees no reason why UCLA can't come out with good intensity for all the teams that they play. "When you're secure with the game plan, you're confident with your performance level, and you are mentally ready to play, the intensity will come."

INFORMATION REGARDING USC STUDENT TICKETS

Please read these instructions carefully

1. Student tickets for the UCLA-USC Football game will be distributed in accordance with the procedures outlined below. The Game will be played on Saturday, November 19, 1988 in the Rose Bowl. Student tickets are priced at $11.00.

2. The reserved seat student tickets for the UCLA-USC Football game will be sold on the basis of priority numbers issued with each student's Season Football ticket. The priority numbers were determined through a random number generating computer system.

3. The priority numbers will serve as the method of admission to the area where the ticket windows are located. Each priority number issued specifies the time and date when the holder of that priority number is to report to Pauley Pavilion to purchase the actual admission ticket to the game. STUDENTS ARE URGED TO REPORT TO PAULEY PAVILION ONLY AT THE TIME SPECIFIED ON THEIR PRIORITY NUMBERED TICKET.

4. EACH STUDENT WITH ONE PRIORITY NUMBER WILL BE ALLOWED TO PURCHASE TWO (2) USC STUDENT TICKETS, PROVIDING THE STUDENT HOLDING THE PRIORITY NUMBER PRESENTS TWO CURRENT UCLA REGISTRATION CARDS (ONE OF WHICH MUST BE HIS OR HER OWN) AND HIS OR HER OWN UCLA STUDENT PICTURE IDENTIFICATION CARD AT THE TIME OF TICKET PURCHASE.

5. Students who did not obtain tickets or a priority number on a season basis but still desire to purchase USC Football tickets may either obtain a priority number in advance at the Central Ticket Office beginning on Monday, October 3 or report to Gate 3, Pauley Pavilion, Wednesday, October 5 at 2 p.m.

6. The best seats in the student section will be sold first. Distribution of these seats, as well as the other seats, will be made equally among all ticket sellers. If more than two persons wish to sit together, then, on the day of the sale, they should arrive at the latest time designation on the priority numbers they hold and they will be issued tickets together by standing in line behind the same ticket seller. Since the assignment of priority numbers was done randomly, students desiring seats together will have to decide whether they wish to pass up the lower priority number in order to sit together.

7. Students should report to Gate 3, Pauley Pavilion at the time designated on their priority numbered ticket. As the priority numbers are called, the students must show their number to the doorman and are admitted to the area where the tickets are purchased.

8. When the student is at the ticket window, he or she must present all of the following:
a. Priority numbered ticket, which is retained by the ticket seller.
b. Current UCLA Registration Card, which is punched by the ticket seller.
c. UCLA Student Photo ID Card.
d. Amount of cash required to purchase game ticket ($11.00 per ticket). No checks will be accepted. CASH ONLY.

9. Those students who are not present at the time their priority number is called should report to Gate 3, Pauley Pavilion, at their earliest convenience after their priority number time, at which time accommodations will be made to insure they purchase a ticket.

Crocker

still for five minutes," said Tomkus. "Jenny adds a lot of spirit, a lot of spark, and consistency. She doesn't have much to say but she's always on fire."

Tomkus described Crocker as a pressure reliever on the court—a 'let's do our job and let's get out of here' type of player. "She doesn't talk volleyball, she talks about other things to get our minds off the pressure," said Tomkus.

On the other side of Crocker's attitude is her determination. "Volleyball is my priority. During the season, I put as much into it as I can to win a national championship," said Crocker. "I get my inspiration from the past couple of years of not doing so well."

After being sidetracked for a year, Crocker is once again moving along with the UCLA women's volleyball team, this time toward a national championship. Now at 11-0, the Bruins are off to their best start since 1983, when they won 20 straight before losing to the eventual national champions, the University of Hawaii. For Crocker, her motivating factor, winning the national championship, is a viable possibility this year. The Bruins have already rolled over pre-season poll favorites the University of Hawaii and the University of Illinois. Just last week, the Bruins stomped over their next big obstacle, the University of Texas. Crocker's final words were to the fans: "We (the team) love their support, and hopefully they'll help us win a national championship."

Campus welcome packs available now

The UCLA Athletic Department along with the NCAA is greeting incoming freshman with Campus Welcome Packs, full of various toiletries, personal care products, a drug and alcohol educational booklet and other helpful materials. As part of the program, one UCLA student will be awarded a $500 tuition scholarship.

Distribution will take place on Bruin Walk, October 3 through October 7th, and will be conducted by the member organizations of the University Recreation Association (URA) under the supervision of Bob Henry, Coordinator of the URA. The URA is a federation of approximately 30 sport and recreation clubs and is designed to fill the gap between intramurals and varsity athletics. It is a unit of the Department of Cultural and Recreational Affairs.

The implementation of this project here at UCLA is part of a nationwide NCAA program which will distribute 400,000 Campus Welcome Packs at more than 100 NCAA-member institutions.

In addition to the products and services represented in the packs, the Deparment of Cultural and Recreational Affairs will include information on the URA and its member organizations, along with information on UCLA intramurals. URA club members will be available to answer questions.

The program was designed to distribute educational information on drugs and alcohol abuse, as well as needed items to help incoming students get started in their new surroundings. It will provide the Athletic Department and Cultural and Recreational Affairs a communications link to new students and give freshmen a more complete understanding of the options available at UCLA in their athletic and recreational pursuits.

Crocker returns from injury with a vengeance

Spirt leader adds great bench stregth

By Sam Chon
Staff Writer

Coming back from an injury is not an easy task for a competitive athlete. Ask Jim McMahon or Joe Theismann. Returning from an injury and then assuming a starting role on the top team in the country can almost be called a miracle. Ask Jenny Crocker, UCLA's starting outside hitter on the nation's No. 1 women's volleyball team.

After a productive freshman year in which she participated in 17 matches, Crocker received a starting role in 1986 as a sophomore. Allowing her versatility to become a major contribution to the team, Crocker assumed the left side of the net as her post, a difficult task for a right-handed hitter. Crocker played in 29 matches in 1986, compiling some impressive statistics, including 28- and 25-kill performances versus the University of Hawaii, a perennial giant in NCAA volleyball.

For Crocker, as for the rest of the team, '86 was not a great year for UCLA volleyball. The Bruins were eliminated from the playoffs that year in the first round of the NCAA tournament by heavy underdog Loyola Marymount. Crocker then saw the oncoming of Compartment Syndrome in her calf, a disease in which the tissue surrounding a muscle is too small to encase the muscle. As a result, Crocker had surgery to correct the problem and missed all of the 1987 season.

"I didn't know what to do with myself," Crocker explained, referring to the time she was recovering from surgery. "I didn't feel as much a part of the team." Bruin head coach Andy Banachowski added that "the injury really set her back...she has not progressed as well as I'd like her to."

Although Crocker's injury completely shut down her volleyball career for an entire season, her recovery and eventual return to the Bruin starting lineup were quick. Crocker made her NCAA re-debut in the first match-up of the season against San Diego State. She had earned her starting role by fending off strong competition from talented incoming freshmen and a solid returning group of sophomores in spring practice.

"She's gotten back to where she left off," noted Banachowski. Against Oregon two weeks ago, Crocker compiled eight kills in a three-game match for a percentage of .500.

From her coach and teammates alike, Crocker received praise for her recovery and her ability as a volleyball player. "Whenever a player sits out a year and then comes back, they're pretty hungry," said Coach Banachowski, commenting on Crocker's desire to play and win. "She's not the best player on the team, but she's the best sixth player we have...and she's filling that role very well," he said.

Although Crocker does not lead the team in any statistic, she does have the ability and talent to be consistently competitive in NCAA-level play. Teammate and former roommate Ann Boyer, who has known and played against Crocker since their sophomore year in high school, emphasized Crocker's versatility. In addition to her outside hitter post on the left side, the 6-0, fourth-year, switch-hitting junior is also effective from the right. On her setting abilities, Boyer said, "She is a good, strong setter...she's the right size and has the ability to push the ball to the outside. She places the ball well for hitters." In addition to her setting and blocking abilities, Crocker has also teamed up with her current roommate, middle blocker Daiva Tomkus, as one of the stronger blockers on the team. Despite her injury, Crocker remains to be one of the team's top players in movement along the front row for blocking and hitting.

To the average Joe Bruin fan, Crocker does not appear to be a vocal player. "She's not a really vocal leader," said Coach Banachowski. "She shows her leadership through her play on the court," he continued. However, roommate Tomkus paints a different picture of Crocker in describing her personality off the court. "Jenny is a fireball. She is a wild woman, constantly peppy. She can't sit

SCOTT WEERSING/Daily Bruin

Jenny Crocker has given her teammates plenty to cheer by returning from a calf injury to start at outside hitter.

Henley is the Minister of Defense

By Michael Bartlett
Staff Writer

Leadership.

That's Darryl Henley's theme for the 1988 football season — his last at UCLA.

Henley, a 5-10, 165 pound cornerback out of Damien High School in Ontario, was the only returning starter in the secondary entering this year. OK, fellow senior Marcus Turner has his share of starting experience, but with the Bruins planning to start a sophomore—Eric Turner—at free safety and a redshirt freshman—Matt Darby—at strong safety, the coaches needed somebody to step forward and take charge.

"Any time you have somebody back for his third year, you look for him to lead," said Tom Hayes, who serves as co-defensive coordinator as well as defensive backs coach. "He provides a great effort on the practice field, and shows leadership through being competitive. That's what you hope to get from your senior football players and that's what he's done.

"Darryl is a good leader. He leads by example and is vocal when he sees something that needs to be done. The younger players look up to him, and that's why they elected him captain."

Before the season started, Henley said that working with some of the younger players was something he really enjoyed.

"They're a fun group to lead. When I make a mistake I get down on myself, but the other guys pick me up. We don't want to make the same mistake again," Henley asserted.

Speaking of the then-upcoming game with Nebraska, Henley said, "It's going to be challenging, but it's going to be fun.

"We're hungry," he added.

As all Bruin fans know, Henley and the other defensive backs had some fun with Nebraska quarterback Steve Taylor. Taylor had burned the Bruins with five touchdown passes in Lincoln last year, but this time the UCLA coverage was markedly improved. Taylor was held to less than a 50 percent completion rate on his passes (14 of 29), and he threw for only 125 yards. Even better, the Bruins picked off three Taylor passes while allowing only two touchdowns as UCLA rolled, 41-28.

"We were angry," Henley said, "not at Nebraska, but at our performance last year. The secondary was angry at its performance—that was all part of that nightmare over there. We had a terrible game and we just didn't play well."

What was the difference between the disaster of 1987 and this year?

"The game plan in the secondary was not to sell out and not overcommit on the run. Trust the front seven—get involved with the run when it was the right time," Henley explained. "When you can do that, you'll have a successful game against a team like Nebraska. And that's what we did—we were disciplined on defense and we were aggressive. We were much smarter than last year."

Perhaps the most aggressive member of the secondary was one of Henley's proteges—Matt Darby.

Darby certainly made Henley look like a prophet when he left Nebraska's Dana Brinson lying cold and flat on the Rose Bowl turf after a tremendous hit on the first play of the second quarter. Before the San Diego State game Henley, asked about Darby's vaunted hitting ability, proclaimed, "Matt. . .Matt will lay wood." After witnessing Darby's Dana Demolition, Henley said it was the hardest hit he had seen in his four years at UCLA.

"Like I said, Matt will bring the wood. Matt's a hitter. He will put it to you. It (the crushing hit on Brinson) worked out so well because the coaches had us prepared for just that play. And Matt read it perfectly. I don't think I've ever seen a hit like that.

"Brinson's hit was undoubtedly the best I've seen since I've been here. (Carnell) Lake had a good one last year against Fresno State, but Matt's is the best. His (Brinson's) helmet almost came off. In the game I was really pumped up because it was a great hit, but watching it on TV . . .(shakes his head). It really hurt. Matt wasn't joking on that one, I thought maybe Brinson had called him something, or his mom something 'cause Matt went after him."

Henley has made his contributions not only on defense, but also in finding his way into the opponents' end zone with punt returns. After returning one for a TD in the '87 opener against San Diego State, Henley waited a year before repeating his feat.

In the 1988 opener, the Aztecs were unable to move the ball on their opening series, punted to Henley, and found themselves down 7-0. Amazingly, it was the first time a Bruin player had touched the ball in the '88 season. Henley finished with 107 on three returns, including 89 on the touchdown.

Just to show he could turn the trick against a team that didn't have black helmets, Henley supplied the icing on one of the greatest quarters in UCLA football history with a 75-yard return that made the score 28-0 UCLA, only 14 minutes into what was supposed to have been a classic matchup of two powerhouse teams.

Henley denied that his return had put the game out of reach.

No. 1 water polo continues to dominate

By Todd Williams
Staff Writer

The UCLA men's water polo team solidified its No. 1 national ranking last weekend by winning all four of its games at the NorCal tournament held at Stanford. In winning the tournament, the Bruins improved their record to 16-0 and will look forward to their first meeting of the year against USC this Saturday at 10 a.m. UCLA was 0-4 against the Trojans last year.

The Bruins had an easy time of it in their opening game against Cal State Los Angeles, as 13 different players scored during a 14-1 blowout of the Golden Eagles. UCLA goalkeeper Dan Hackett fended off six CSLA shots in the lopsided contest.

The Bruin offense continued to flex its muscle in match two against Fresno State, winning 11-6. Bruin senior Hank Peterson scored six goals to pace the balanced UCLA attack, while Pero Asic chipped in two. The Bulldogs merited some respect from the play of West German import Stephan Pullman, who had four goals. Although the offense starred, the difference in the game was the play of the Bruin defense, which shut out Fresno in all of its power play opportunities. UCLA goalie Mike VanderWaerdt had 12 saves and an outstanding tournament overall.

The real challenge for UCLA began on Saturday, when the Bruins went up against host Stanford in the semi-final. [illegible] the Cardinal has been the surprise team of the season. Picked to finish in the middle of the pack, Stanford has spelled trouble for many top teams. USC learned that the hard way, when it was upset by the Cardinal earlier in the season.

Both teams were unable to pull away early, as the score was 2-1 in favor of UCLA at the half. By the end of the third quarter, the Bruins had only gone up by one more, 3-1, but as they did last week against Long Beach, the boys from Westwood came up with a big fourth quarter to pull out the win. The Bruins found net three times, while Stanford could only counter with two, as UCLA advanced to the final behind the 6-3 victory. Vanderwaerdt once again showed his teeth with 13 saves. Junior Alec [illegible] had three goals, while Peterson added a pair.

In the final on Sunday morning, the Bruins faced No. 2-ranked Cal, which earlier defeated USC in the other semi-final. UCLA took an early lead and held on, as it appeared in control with a 4-1 lead at the half. Neither squad could break through in the third, but the Golden Bears came on strong in the final frame. After Rousseau converted his second goal of the match to make it 5-2 early in the fourth, Cal responded with three goals, the last one coming with :58 left to play. The Bruin defense then took charge and controlled the game the rest of the way to preserve the 5-4 victory and capture the tournament. Along with Rousseau, Peterson tallied twice for UCLA.

With the NorCal behind them, the Bruins will set their sights on crosstown nemesis Southern Cal. UCLA assistant coach Blake [illegible] explained what the team needs to accomplish before it goes up against the Trojans. "Our defense is so strong that we can comfortably hold off a team with a two or three goal lead, but we will have to put more goals in the net (against USC)."

Marcelo Caraslade and his teammates are ranked No. 1.

Hearing examines racism

Grievances aired, solutions offered

By Shana Chandler and Tina Anima
Staff Writers

Racism took center stage on campus Tuesday as State legislators probed allegations of racism and ethnic insensitivity throughout the University of California system.

Senator Art Torres chaired a five-hour state Senate committee hearing in a crowded hearing room on campus. The hearings are part of a series designed to look at higher education in the UC system.

Torres and other members of the Senate Special Committee on UC Admissions heard testimony from undergraduates, graduates and official representatives from throughout the system.

"The grievances we heard (today) are real," said Marjorie Green, Western States education director and a member of the Anti-Defamation League.

"Tensions are being allowed to fester," she said. UCLA has the potential to alleviate some of those tensions, Green said.

"We have to ask, 'If not (in the universities) where should such efforts begin?' "

Problems with racial tension have risen as the number of people of color on campuses has increased, said UC Berkeley Sociology Professor Troy Duster. Suddenly, the proportion of white students being admitted was threatened. "There was a clash of a sense of entitlement," he said.

When research is the main focus of the public university system, concern with the education of incoming students takes second place, speakers said.

"(Return) this public university to the public of California," said Reverend Ralph Crabbe, a member of the NAACP.

"Faculty, administration and staff forget that the UC system is a public system and they are the stewards of the public trust," he said.

Despite testimony from a wide range of students about racial and ethnic insensitivity on campuses, many administrations have made strides to address those concerns, said Alice Cox, assistant vice president of student services in the UC Office of the President. But their best efforts never would eradicate the problems, she said.

"UC (cannot) eliminate completely from its population the threads of prejudice and bigotry woven into the fabric of American society," she said.

Torres said he feared that chancellors would ignore UC President David Gardner's Sept. 26 plea that each campus would increase efforts to include women and minorities in their faculties and student bodies would "be very powerful."

UCLA already has made strides in increasing the numbers of minority students, said Chairman of the Chancellor's Council on Diversity Dr. Raymund Paredes.

"The graduate schools (at UCLA) are supporting more students of color than ever before, and the Chancellor has been very supportive," said Paredes, who is also the associate dean of the Graduate Division and an associate professor of English.

"(But) there's a conflict between the rate of progress that is desired and the rate of progress that can be achieved."

Young challenged

Former president-elect Lloyd Monserratt challenged Chancellor Charles Young to combat racism on campus.

"The University and Charles Young have not dealt with the real problem of racism," Monserratt said.

But Young said he had consistently demonstrated his commitment to campus diversity.

"There are those who criticize fairly the effectiveness with which we've done things, but it's not fair to doubt my intentions," Young said.

"Many disagree about the speed with which action has been taken. I am one of them," he said.

Torres also called Young to task for his reported comments that the hearing was a campaign ploy.

After claiming that he had been mis-reported, Young

Report predicts effects of quake

Extensive devastation possible

The Associated Press
with Bruin reports

A new state study on earthquake safety predicts widespread devastation if a major earthquake strikes the metropolitan area, but a UCLA professor says committees here have accounted for this in their disaster planning.

The report says a quake would trigger raging fires, collapse buildings, pour oil and sewage into harbors and knock out many hospital beds and utilities — a disaster worse than "the Big One" on the San Andreas Fault. And while the prediction is not new, the study elaborates upon damage estimates.

In fact, a quake measuring 7 on the Richter scale on the Newport-Inglewood Fault Zone "poses one of the greatest hazards to life and property in the nation," California's Division of Mines and Geology said in the disaster scenario report issued Tuesday.

The fault zone stretches 45 miles through the urban area, from near Beverly Hills through Long Beach to Laguna Beach. The possibility of a quake along it has been included in UCLA disaster plans since at least 1985.

"A 7½ scale quake on the Inglewood Fault has always been potentially much more serious than a quake on the San Andreas Fault," said Sam Aroni, chairman of the Joint Administrative-Academic Senate Committee for Earthquake Safety. "The San Andreas Fault covers a larger area, but the Inglewood Fault is much closer to the heart of UCLA."

A quake along the Inglewood Fault would also cause much greater damage in metropolitan Los Angeles and Orange counties than a magnitude 8.3 along the more distant San Andreas Fault, said Jeff Ziony, an assistant director of the division's parent agency, the Department of Conservation.

The fault zone caused the 6.3-magnitude Long Beach earthquake in 1933, killing 115 people and injuring hundreds. Scientists don't know how often

'Safety Week' centers on security on campus

By Marlene Casillas
Staff Writer

On-campus residents are discovering more than roommates' names and cafeteria hours as they settle into UCLA.

"Safety and Security Week," which runs through Friday, offers students the opportunity to learn preventive measures that increase personal safety, said Frank Trueba, assistant director of Sproul Hall.

The program, sponsored by UCLA Housing, is part of a year-long campaign to increase student awareness of the crimes, accidents and hazards that occur at UCLA.

"Our goal is to inform people that the campus is not a sanctuary from crime," Trueba said, "and that there are steps each individual can take to keep themselves and their property safe."

Residence hall personnel tackled the challenge of educating the residents with a week of programs and giveaways that highlight safety and security.

Activities, scheduled daily, target issues such as theft protection, earthquake preparedness, motorcycle safety and sexual assault and rape prevention.

A representative from the Women's Resource Center lectured on rape and sexual assault, providing statistics and shattering myths about the crime, said Christy O'Shaughnessy, residence coordinator.

In addition, lectures will be given on "How to Keep Your Macintosh from Walking Out on You," and "CSO Programs at UCLA."

Students can bring valuable property to "engraving parties," and have their California driver's license number imprinted (on stereos for example) by campus police, said Trueba. Social security numbers are not used to label property because they are re-issued after people die, Trueba added, noting that driver's license numbers are unique.

Students have also received pamphlets and gifts to help get the message across, said Trueba. Mugs, buttons and keychains with service and emergency phone numbers and the theme week's logo and motto "Be Aware," will be distributed throughout the week.

"Even if students do not attend the programs or need to use the phone numbers, we've provided them with items that are functionable and can be used all year," Trueba said.

Attendance and interest in the programs has been high, said O'Shaughnessy.

"People who come to the lectures leave with a new perspective on the topic. I think there are a lot of details people never thought about before." Residents are responding positively to the program, she added.

"I think it is good to make people aware," commented Tim Niu, a freshman in Sproul Hall.

CD players stolen from station KLA

Two black Kenwood compact disc players were stolen from the KLA radio station in Ackerman Grand Ballroom yesterday, according to the station's Acting General Manager, Lisa Welch.

The compact disc players, valued at between $500 to $600, according to Welch, may have been taken from their bolted-down locations between midnight, when the last DJ left, and 11 a.m., when the robbery was discovered by Welch and an assistant news editor. It is likely the crime occurred before crowds came into the ballroom to register for classes at 8 a.m., Welch said.

The office was locked when the two KLA workers arrived, and there were no signs of forced entry, Welch said.

Welch did not know the model or serial numbers at press time.

The two units were the only items stolen from the station and KLA expects to operate normally by playing albums instead of compact disc.

If the compact disc players are not retrieved, insurance should replace them, Welch said. But that may take some time, she added. Six months passed before insurance replaced an Apple Macintosh computer stolen from the station last year, Welch said.

No one from the UC Police Department was available to comment on the case at press time.

Measure might mean $36 million for UCLA

Propositions 1988

By Irena Auerbuch,
Staff Writer

$600 million could be allotted to public higher education by the California state legislature in order to "fund critically needed construction of classrooms, laboratories and other critically needed facilities," according to a UCLA Alumni Association newsletter.

The measure, Proposition 78, or the 1988 Public Higher Education Capital Facilities Bond Act, could allocate $36 million in state funds to UCLA if it is passed by the California voters this November.. The money will be raised by the state's sale of General Obligation Bonds.

Preliminary budget planning has so far allocated $121 million of the $600 million to fund 36 UC construction projects over the next fiscal year. The California State University (CSU) system and the California Community College system would receive the remainder.

The $36 million UCLA would receive if Proposition 78 is passed has been budgeted into three main segments.

The largest of the segments is $32 million in construction costs to be used to upgrade facilities in Young Hall, Botany and the Life Sciences building. Space would be added to Young Hall for research laboratories.

Young Hall would be brought up to code for safety, fire and other regulations, an area in which it is now deficient, said Director of Planning and Space Management Rodney Rose.

Once brought up to code, Young Hall would house programs in chemistry and life sciences, while the new addition would house programs in organic chemistry and microbiology.

$1.9 million would help complete the Fowler Museum of

135 nations cited for human rights abuse

Amnesty report lists atrocities

By Ben Dobbin
Associated Press

LONDON — Amnesty International on Wednesday accused over 135 nations of human rights abuses ranging from the jailing of draft evaders in Western Europe to the massacre of unarmed civilians in Iraq and Sudan.

The international human rights group said the list of offenders in its annual survey was the longest it has published since its establishment in 1961.

Amnesty, which won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1977, recorded abuses last year in more than 80 percent of the 159 U.N. member states. But it said it was encouraged by the emergence of more than 1,000 human rights groups in recent years and the proliferation of laws to protect prisoners' rights.

"In at least half the countries of the world, people are locked away for speaking their minds, often after trials that are no more than a sham," the 278-page report said.

"In at least a third of the world's nations, men, women and even children are tortured. In scores of countries, governments pursue their goals by kidnaping and murdering their own citizens."

The report added: "More than ever before in world history, governments are exposed to the glare of international publicity — the greatest weapon we have."

The report cited the United States, where 25 prisoners were put to death last year, for executing John Brogdon, a man diagnosed as mentally retarded, and Edward Earl Johnson, despite "substantial doubts" about his guilt. Amnesty opposes the death penalty.

Germany closed channels of information to hide violations, it said, and China, Haiti, Syria and South Africa clamped down on the reporting of abuses by denying prisoners access to lawyers or families.

Soviet's exile re-examined

Filmmakers request review of Solzhenitsyn case

By Ann Imse
Associated Press

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union of Film Makers said Tuesday it has asked the government to review the legality of the 1974 deportation of Nobel laureate Alexander Solzhenitsyn.

The author was deported and stripped of his Soviet citizenship after publication in the West of his book "The Gulag Archipelago," which documented the horrors of Soviet prison camps and political repression.

The union's request for reconsideration of Solzhenitsyn's exile is based on "strictly legal grounds," Arkady Vaksberg, a prominent lawyer and writer, told a news conference at the union's headquarters.

Solzhenitsyn was exiled "contrary to his will," and "without giving him the opportunity to defend himself," said Vaksberg, who in recent months has written a series of exposes of corruption and repression under Josef Stalin and other Soviet leaders.

The filmmakers' union is seeking a response from the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet, the Soviet government's highest executive body, by Solzhenitsyn's 70th birthday on Dec. 11, Vaksberg said.

State chief justice defends court, plans

By Kathleen Maclay
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — In his first news conference in over a year, California Supreme Court Chief Justice Malcolm Lucas on Tuesday delicately fielded questions about the conservative-dominated court's death penalty decisions, its efforts to improve efficiency and political independence.

Lucas, named to the court by Gov. George Deukmejian in 1984, was promoted to Chief Justice by Deukmejian in 1987 after Chief Justice Rose Bird and Justices Cruz Reynoso and Joseph Grodin were removed by voters. The acrimonious election focused on allegations that the Bird court was soft on crime.

In the year since conservatives gained a majority on the court, 40 death penalties have been upheld and 15 reversed, Lucas said in his 50-minute news conference at the Supreme Court. The Bird court reversed 64 of 68 death penalty cases in a seven-year period.

"I really have no explanation for the difference" the chief justice said about his court's record compared to the Bird court.

He maintained the current court is following state law as well as federal law, which has undergone a change in standards that allows state courts to uphold lower court decisions where they find "harmless error."

While the new court has concentrated its energies on death penalty cases, there still is a backlog of about 180. Lucas said another 39 cases could be added to the list by the end of the year because of automatic appeals.

The chief justice was asked if reviewing so many unsavory and unsettling death penalty cases in such short time takes its toll on

Measure would give state schools $800 million

By Kathleen Grubb
Associated Press

Editor's note: This is the second in a series of articles on November ballot propositions. Tomorrow: Proposition 80.

SACRAMENTO — Five months after winning $800 million in bonds for public school construction, California schools will ask November voters for another $800 million.

Proposition 79 is a companion to a bond measure that virtually was spent as soon as it passed in June. School districts say the twin bond package would raise just a fraction of the money they need to adequately house a multiplying student population.

Over 1 million new students are expected to enroll in California public schools in the next six years, and educators say they need to add 300 new classrooms a month to keep up.

Moreover, supporters of the bond measure say, over half of California's 7,000 schools are at least 25 years old and need repairs to make sure they're safe.

Indeed, by May 25, school districts had submitted $1.1 billion in applications for matching state funds to renovate aging buildings. Applications for new construction totaled $2.9 billion.

Passage of the June measure replenished an empty state school construction fund, but only temporarily. Most of that money already had been promis-

Bentsen, Quayle ready for VP debate tonight

Vice presidential nominees Dan Quayle and Lloyd Bentsen polished their debate lines Tuesday in preparation for their 90 minutes in the campaign spotlight.

At the top of the tickets, George Bush said he wanted to inspire affluent youths "to help our poor," while Michael Dukakis said the GOP offers only "slogans and symbols."

Republican Quayle and Democrat Bentsen were flying to Omaha, Neb., the site of tonight's debate.

"We're ready," Quayle said during a tour of the Bush-Quayle campaign headquarters.

A new poll released Tuesday suggested that the debate would give Quayle a chance to overcome some of the negative images about him that are driving undecided voters away from Bush.

The CBS News-New York Times poll of 1,034 probable voters found 48 percent support for the Bush-Quayle ticket and 46 percent for the Dukakis-Bentsen ticket. But when voters were asked about their presidential preference only, the support for Dukakis slipped to 43 percent.

The poll, conducted Saturday through Monday, had a margin of error of plus or minus three percentage points.

"We are very, very proud of you," Republican campaign chairman James A. Baker III told Quayle. "We are very, very proud of the job you're doing for this campaign, and we are very, very proud of the job we know you're going to do tomorrow in Omaha."

When asked what tactics he'd use against Bentsen, Quayle said, "My debate strategy? Tune in tomorrow night."

"Feeling good," said Bentsen, while walking from a practice studio to his hotel in Austin, Texas.

Spokesman Mike McCurry said Bentsen was working on "the best way of making a point memorable or punchy."

Dukakis campaign manager Susan Estrich, who was in Austin helping Bentsen, said, "We're not teaching him new positions on issues . . . I think that's what the Quayle people have to do."

Bush was in Sacramento, and he outlined his plan for a quasi-public foundation called Youth in Service to America to encourage young people to volunteer in community activities.

"I want our affluent to help our poor," he said. "I want the young men and women of our tree-lined suburbs to get on a bus, or the subway, or the metro, and go into the cities where the want is."

The Republican presidential nominee described his proposal as an alternative to massive federal spending.

He said years of federal programs designed to help the poor had proven that "we can't buy our way out."

A fact sheet distributed to reporters said Bush would ask for $100 million in federal funds to match private donations to the foundation.

Dukakis spoke at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill., and attacked what he called Bush's "record of failure."

"Mr. Bush was given five important missions by this administration and he failed every one," said the Democratic presidential nominee. "And that was before they asked him to pick a running mate in this election."

Dukakis listed the five assignments as resolving trade problems with Japan, heading an anti-terrorism panel, leading the war on drugs, investigating problems in the banking industry and heading a task force on regulatory reform.

The Massachusetts governor said Bush "offers slogans and symbols; Lloyd Bentsen and I are offering real solutions to the problems American families face every day and every week and every month."

Brake defect prompts recall of motorcycles

The Associated Press

GARDENA, Calif. — All of Honda's 1988 model NX650 motorcycles are being voluntarily recalled to repair a defect that could cause loss of front-wheel braking, the company announced.

American Honda Motor Co. Inc. said Tuesday that its dealers would replace front wheel hubs free of charge on all 2,032 of the motorcycles sold. This is the first year the model has been produced.

Under severe use, one or more of the bolts securing the front brake disc assembly can loosen, the company said, posing a potential danger of front brake failure. The rear brakes are unaffected and Honda hasn't had any reports of accidents blamed on the defect, the company said.

Owners of the bikes will be notified, or can take the machines back to their dealers.

Students plan fast to protest pesticide use

By David Mori
Staff Writer

At 5 p.m. today, the Minority Association of Planners and Architects (MAPA) will kick off a 36-day "relay" fast to draw attention to a boycott of California table grapes.

The UCLA organization will stage its own version of United Farm Workers' (UFW) President Caesar Chavez' fast to protest the use of allegedly harmful pesticides on California table grapes. His fast began July 17 and lasted for 36 days.

Instead of one faster, MAPA will stage a 36-day "relay fast," in which participants fast for a day and/or contribute food and money to the farmworkers. Protesters may also wear colored armbands to show their support for the UFW, said MAPA member Lalo Castellanos.

He explained that the protest will hopefully tie the UCLA campus to issues relating to the outside community, such as worker safety and wages.

An educational forum will be held at 5 p.m. and will feature speakers and activists from the community, including Bill Ituarte, UFW campus liaison, and Oscar Mondragon, a UFW representative.

The actual "relay fast" will begin immediately after the educational forum.

Shuttle condition OK, awaits minor repairs

By Lee Siegel
Associated Press

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — After nearly 65 Earth orbits, Discovery's post-flight condition was as good or better than any space shuttle although debris gouged six heat-shield tiles, apparently during liftoff, a NASA official said Tuesday.

There was no damage to the orbiter's brakes, landing gear or tires, John "Tip" Talone said.

Discovery sat inside the 100-foot-tall "mate-demate device," a framework where it gets serviced for a piggyback jet ride home Saturday to Florida.

"The crews are working, and they will work round the clock until the orbiter leaves," said Ted Ayers, deputy site manager for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Dryden Flight Research Facility here.

Discovery landed Monday on the hard clay bed of Rogers Dry Lake at this Mojave Desert air base, capping a nearly flawless flight that was America's first manned space mission since the Challenger tragedy in 1986.

"The vehicle looks beautiful," Talone, the shuttle processing director, said during a news conference. "It looks probably as good or better as any vehicle we've brought in here."

Six tiles near the right wing must be replaced because of a 12-inch-long, 6-inch-wide, 1½-inch-deep gouge apparently caused by debris during the shuttle's launch last Thursday, Talone said. He added that the tiles weren't missing, as Ayers said earlier. Talone said officials weren't yet sure if the debris was ice that formed on the outside of the shuttle's external tank, which contains supercold liquid fuel.

"There's a minor number of traditional dings" on some other tiles, caused by the impact of tiny particles during liftoff and landing, he added.

After preliminary inspection found no damage, the shuttle's brakes were shipped to B.F. Goodrich in Ohio for a closer look, he said. The brakes were improved because of brake and tire damage during previous missions.

Talone said NASA workers haven't identified the cause of the trouble with Discovery's cooling system flash evaporators, a problem that made the astronauts endure temperatures in the 80s during their flight.

NASA plans for Discovery to leave Edwards early Saturday, arriving at Kennedy Space Center before dark following a single stop near San Antonio, Texas, Talone said.

The mate-demate device is a red-painted steel trusswork structure, in which the 193,000-pound orbiter is serviced, then hoisted 60 feet and placed atop a modified Boeing 747 jet that will fly it back to Cape Canaveral, Fla.

Discovery's next mission is scheduled to start Feb. 18, three months after Atlantis' planned Nov. 17 liftoff with a classified Defense Department payload.

30 Medflies found; major infestation

The Associated Press

EL MONTE, Calif. — Thirty Mediterranean fruit flies were found in Los Angeles County traps, triggering a massive effort to kill the pests before they destroy area crops, officials said Monday.

The flies, both male and female, were discovered over the weekend in an area north of the Santa Monica Freeway and south of Beverly Hills in the Westside community of Palms, said William Edwards, chief deputy to the county agriculture commissioner. The area is less than 10 miles from downtown Los Angeles.

More than 1,300 detection traps were set after a single male fruit fly was discovered in a trap in the area last week.

"This one has the potential to be really bad," Edwards said. "Thirty-one flies is a significant number to start out with."

Edwards said aerial applications of the pesticide malathion are tentatively scheduled for late Wednesday, weather permitting.

"We could run into some problem with the fog, but it's very important we get this spray down to knock out those flies as soon as possible," he said.

Also planned is the release of up to 40 million sterile Mediterranean fruit flies per week over a couple months in an effort to eradicate the crop-destroying pests, he said.

A 35-square-mile quarantine will probably be imposed, he said.

The latest infestation is unrelated to one earlier this year in the San Fernando Valley. An agricultural quarantine prohibiting the transportation of produce outside a 62-mile area is expected to be lifted by November.

The eradication effort in that infestation centered on the release of sterile Medflies imported from Hawaii to breed the agricultural scourge out of existence.

The Medfly, a severe threat to California's multibillion-dollar agricultural industry, is considered one of the most destructive crop-damaging pests because it preys on more than 250 varieties of produce, reproduces rapidly and survives in different climates, officials said.

The state's most serious infestation cost $97.6 million in eradication efforts that continued from 1980 to 1982.

This year's efforts have cost more than $1 million, officials said.

Group seeks to renew boycott against Nestle

By Jerry Estill
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The people who engineered a seven-year boycott against the Nestle company in which ASUCLA once participated, called on Tuesday for a renewal of the protest on an even larger scale.

Douglas A. Johnson, chairman of Action for Corporate Accountability, called for a resumption of the boycott against the company to fight the promotion of infant formulae in Third World nations. He said that Nestle has failed to live up to the agreements it signed in 1984 that ended the original action.

This time, said Johnson, the group is expanding the boycott to American Home Products, which it said is the second largest distributor of infant formula in developing nations.

While urging an across-the-board boycott of the two companies' products, protest leaders are asking their followers to focus on two products from each company: Nestle's Taster's Choice Instant Coffee and Carnation Coffee-mate Non-Diary Creamer, and American Home Products' Anacin and Advil across-the-counter pain relievers.

Action for Corporate Accountability accused both companies of violating at least the spirit — and by Johnson's interpretation, also the letter — of the World Health Organization and UNICEF Code of Marketing of Breast-milk Substitutes.

The code — which Nestle agreed to as a condition of ending the earlier protest — permits donations or sales of formula for distribution to infants needing breast milk substitutes, and says the formula may not be used for sales promotion.

At issue is whether the formula distributors effectively cause the babies to become hooked on formula within days of birth by making their product available for free at hospitals and other facilities.

Johnson's group, based in Minneapolis, says it is immoral for manufacturers to encourage the formula's use in powdered form in Third World countries where most mothers don't have the money, education or sanitary facilities to mix it properly.

The group says that thousands of Third World babies drink from bottles filled with drastically understrength formula that does not give them the nutrients they need or infects them with germs.

Boycott leaders said the companies' actions have undercut the premise that mothers' milk is best, especially for Third World babies. Representatives of both firms denied the assertion.

Illness often occurs when the mothers take their babies home, Dr. R.K. Anand, a pediatrician from Bombay, India, said at the news conference.

"In the hands of the poor, the feeding bottle often becomes a passport to death for the young child," said Anand.

The physician said that bottle feeding kills large numbers of babies in India and other developing countries.

Janice Mantell, executive director of Action for Corporate Accountability, estimated that about $6 billion in infant formula is sold worldwide each year, half of it in developing countries. She said Nestle has 40 percent to 50 percent of that $3 billion market and American Home Products about 20 percent.

A Washington spokesman for Nestle, Thad Jackson, insisted that the company is in "total compliance" with national and international codes.

Carol Emerling, a spokeswoman for American Home Products, said, "This whole activity is based on allegations that we violate the WHO code — and we flat out deny it."

Wife of state official in custody amid charges in embezzlement scam

The Associated Press

SACRAMENTO — The wife of a ranking statewide community college official accused in the alleged embezzlement of more than $400,000 in college funds surrendered to authorities Tuesday for investigation of grand theft, the state Justice Department said.

Pamela McNary Howard, wife of Robert Howard, was in custody in Sacramento County jail in lieu of $50,000 bail, authorities said. She was expected to post a bond and be released later Tuesday.

Mrs. Howard was scheduled to be arraigned Wednesday in Municipal Court, the district attorney's office said. Prosecutors allege that Mrs. Howard participated in an embezzlement scheme with her husband.

Her husband, the acting dean of student services and special programs at the statewide California community college system headquarters in Sacramento, was arrested at his office last week on grand theft and conflict of interest charges.

State Justice Department investigators say Howard, 42, using his authority to approve contracts and disburse funds for programs to assist the handicapped, set up a firm to siphon away money from the colleges.

Justice Department investigator Whitt Murray said the embezzlement may total $900,000 or more, with funds diverted from several local community college districts, including Yosemite, Foothill-De Anza and North Orange County.

The company, called McNary and McNary, received payments over a seven-year period, according to investigators. Howard's wife and her mother were listed in city documents as principals in the company, with the firm's business address given as Howard's home on Riverside Boulevard in Sacramento. Pamela Howard's mother has not been accused in the case.

Nuclear mishaps not reported for 28 years

By Bryan Brumley
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Serious mishaps over 28 years at a government plant in South Carolina that produces materials for nuclear weapons were kept secret for national security reasons and not reported to Washington, federal officials said Tuesday.

But the situation is changing, in part due to pressure from Congress, they said.

One senior Energy Department official has compared the attitude toward safety at the Savannah River facility near Aiken, S.C., to that which led to the explosion of the shuttle Challenger on Jan. 28, 1986.

"There has always been a mind set, a culture, that we are doing work that is important for apologized.

"It was not an accurate statement and one that I should have had more sense than to say," he said.

Campuses had slacked off in their efforts to improve diversity on campus and had become "re-active," Young said.

Administration must be 'pro-active' and improve efforts to attack the causes of the racial incidents and initiate suitable punishments.

Student testimony

Torres had visited UCLA in June after violence disrupted undergraduate student government elections here last spring. President-Elect Lloyd Monserratt had been declared ineligible because of insufficient units and GPA. In a subsequent election Mike Meehan was elected to the post among allegations of racism by a coalition of minority groups.

But Meehan denied racism had prompted the election and cited a number of programs aimed at diversity. The inclusion of minority Freshman Summer Program students in campus-wide orientation is "a step towards addressing the question of diversity on campus," he said.

Fourteen undergraduate representatives followed Meehan's testimony, speaking about their own experiences of racial tension at the UC campuses.

But Jewish Student Union President Elaine Mandel criticized the format of the hearing.

"Perhaps our time and energy, and yours, Senator Torres, could be more wisely spent on a discussion of solutions, rather than just another discussion of problems," she said.

But Torres said that history taught lessons for the future.

'Perhaps our time and energy, and yours, Senator Torres, could be more wisely spent on a discussion of solutions, rather than just another discussion of problems.'

— Elaine Mandel JSU President

"The only way you learn about the future is to look at the past."

Fraternity and sorority representatives defended the inherent diversity of their systems even though they are predominated by whites.

All campus groups "vie for power" with resulting racial tensions, said Gary Hobart, a representative from the UCLA Interfraternity Council.

Many students called for implementation of ethnic/gender studies requirements, and the creation of a multi-cultural campus center.

Faculty recruitment

But the success of diversity programs lay not only with the attitudes of the faculty but also the inclusion of minority faculty members to act as role models, several speakers said.

Though strides have been made at UCLA in the number of Hispanic faculty members, Paredes said, three candidates turned down the offers.

"They are being pursued by universities all over the country," as other universities awaken to the diversity issue, Paredes said.

"There aren't enough eligible potential (minority) candidates," said Assemblyman Tom Hayden. "There isn't a big enough pool. Do we change the rules, or admit that we have a problem and no progress will be made?"

"As I look to the 21st century, there is no one to take over the reigns of leadership," Torres said. "The white majority will become the white minority but will remain in control," he said.

The next committee hearing will be held in Fresno on Nov. 10, addressing the growth and development of the UC system.

'AS I look to the 21st century, there is no one to take over the reigns of leadership. The white majority will become the white minority but will remain in control,'

— Senator Torres

Researcher finds unusual Harris' hawks intriguing

By Matt Mygatt
Associated Press

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — They are chocolate-brown winged hunters with yellow landing gear and weapons systems, trained in the latest search-and-destroy maneuvers — the flush and ambush, the surprise pounce and the relay tactic.

They scan the tan sand dunes, the rolling desert hills dotted with mesquite, shinnery oak and patches of creosote brush.

They look for their victims — perhaps a jackrabbit or a cottontail — at Los Medanos, the dunes, 30 miles east of Carlsbad in southeastern New Mexico.

They fly in squadrons of two to six, brothers, sisters, mothers and fathers.

Biologist Jim Bednarz, after years of research, is fascinated with these unusual birds, called Harris' hawks.

A full-size female hawk, with a wingspan of almost 4 feet, is one and a half feet long from head to tail and weighs about 2 pounds, while an adult jackrabbit can weigh more than four and a half pounds, Bednarz says.

"It's very risky," he says. "There are not very many predators that will take prey three times their size."

But these birds of prey are not solitary hunters like other raptors, Bednarz says. They hunt in groups and, like humans, are very social animals.

Bednarz, now director of higher education and research at the Hawk Mountain Sanctuary Association north of Kempton, Pa., says, "Both behaviors are rare."

Predators such as wolves, lions and African wild dogs cooperate when they hunt, he says, "but with birds, it's debatable."

"As far as the Harris' hawk goes, what we've seen may be similar to an elementary step in the development of a complex human-like social syste$uun said in a telephone interview.

"What the research suggests, at least with this one species, is that cooperation per se is the

Over-dedicated professionals worry doctor

By Dean Golembeski
Associated Press

HARTFORD, Conn. — If you're ever in a hospit4l, keep an eye out for the "night riders" because they've stopped watching out for themselves.

They're doctors who work long hours at unusual times of the night, often winning the admiration of their peers. But they are really out of control, overly dedicated to work, obsessed.

Dr. Charles Boren, medical director of The Institute of Living, a renowned psychiatric hospital, is lassoing night riders and other professionals who are running on empty, becoming inefficient and isolating themselves from their colleagues.

The institute, one of the nation's oldest and largest private psychiatric hospitals, has established a program called "The Retreat" to treat the businessmen, doctors, priests, lawyers and others who are losing their ability to function because of the stress of their careers.

The program allows up to 28 professionals at a time to live together, talk to each other, share their common problems and put their lives back together.

A stay can be as short as one week or as long as six months, but the average stay is about 62 days, said Dr. Walter A. Kekich, the institute's director of the acute, specialty and ambulatory services unit.

During that period, the professionals receive individual counseling and group therapy. They also have free time for reflection, travel and other recreations

One participant in the program who has spoken publicly about his experience is Archbishop John Quinn, who tenders to 375,000 Roman Catholic parishioners in the San Francisco area. Quinn, 59, spent four months at the retreat earlier this year, before returning to his job in April.

A former president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops, he said he entered the program because of stress, exhaustion and depression.

"I was finding I wasn't measuring up and wishing I could do better dealing with the problems of people around me," Quinn told reporters when he returned to work. "You feel disappointed in yourself that you're not doing more, and yet you're doing so much you're at the point of exhaustion."

He decided after the retreat to make some changes in his life to include more relaxation. He said he planned to buy a dog, play some golf and to end his isolation by opening his residence to two other priests.

Quinn's case fits the pattern that the experts at the institute have seen repeated over and over again.

"These people are often used to having the answers, used to giving help, used to being looked to as someone who can ease the pain. When they reach a point when they're in need, they really don't know how to go to someone else," Boren said.

"Often they have sort of kept it together and continued to function, albeit with great pain and some disability, until generally there is some kind of situation where their colleagues see that they're having trouble . . . They may have trouble with drug abuse or alcohol . . . The greatest problem is depression."

Good teaching aim of recent school reforms

By Lee Mitgang
Associated Press

After spending five years and billions of tax dollars raising classroom standards and teacher salaries, some states and school districts are turning to the teachers themselves to lead the next leg of the journey to better schools.

But they warn this latest reform effort will take years to reap benefits.

Most states, prodded by dozens of reports since a national commission in 1983 branded America's schools "mediocre," imposed layer upon layer of "top-down" reforms. They raised teacher pay but also imposed stricter course guidelines and new competency tests for both teachers and students.

A 50-state survey by Associated Press reporters now finds a growing willingness among states and school districts to ease their regulatory grip on public schools and give teachers a more direct role in shaping curricula.

Reformers say teaching, even with fatter paychecks, has become less attractive because the new rules thwart initiative. And while students may be better test-takers, they add, reforms to date have not provided the critical thinking skills needed in a competitive world.

"Most of the reforms so far have been paper and headlines," said Beverly L. Corelle, president of the Maryland State Teachers Association.

Getting beyond such surface reforms has been difficult in many schools, however, where educators refuse to acknowledge how bad off some students are.

"Very few schools look at the national picture and realize that only 15 percent (of high school students) can write a simple letter. And only a small percentage can locate the United States or the Atlantic Ocean on a map, or work with a simple bus timetable," said Albert Shanker, president of the American Federation of Teachers. "So why should anyone change their ways and habits unless in their gut they feel the system isn't working?"

Shanker and other reform leaders are now telling states that the path to better schools goes through the schoolhouse, not the statehouse — freeing teachers to try new lessons and ideas, and students to learn at their own pace instead of in lockstep with peers.

A dozen Arizona districts are experimenting with "outcome-based education," in which students scoring less than a "B" on assignments get extra time and tutoring to redo the work without getting a poor mark. Utah is spending $1 million on a similar program. "There are people who say kids need to fail," said Dave Briggs, principal of Alhambra High School in Phoenix. "I think that's garbage. We're here to teach you success."

Rochester, N.Y., made headlines with a teacher contract raising top pay to $70,000 from $51,000. But more important than the lofty salaries, say both the school board and the teachers union, are "school-based planning teams" in which teachers and administrators will plan how to run their schools relatively free of school board interference.

Hawks

reason why the birds are social and that individuals do indeed get benefits by working with other individuals.

"Also, it shows the birds have levels of sophistication that a lot of men haven't attributed to them."

The Harris' hawk is generally uncommon in the United States, Bednarz says, but one area of concentration is Los Medanos, 162 square miles of desert proposed to the U.S. Bureau of Land Management as the Los Medanos Raptor Area.

While studying birds of prey for his doctorate at the University of New Mexico from 1981 through 1985, Bednarz was prodded by a professor to investigate Harris' hawks.

Earlier research in Arizona had suggested Harris' hawks were polyandrous — two males sharing one female, he says. There were also rumors Harris' hawks nested in the fall, unusual for a bird.

"With that as my guiding question, I went out to see if those behaviors were found in New Mexico populations," Bednarz says.

Bednarz found that the New Mexico Harris' hawks did not appear to be polyandrous and that the extra birds actually were young hawks reared in the nesting areas in previous years.

"They are more or less extended family groups with old offspring," he says.

He also found that pairs stayed together for several years and that after a baby left the nest, the parent hawks seemed to start another family immediately under certain conditions.

But when Bednarz ended his dissertation research, he was not satisfied because, "I wasn't able to put my finger on the real cause of why this hawk lived in groups. Why do those extra birds stay up to three years gn$$those parents, which is very rare for birds?"

With a federal grant, he began a follow-up study in 1985, examining cooperative hunting, documenting the use of the Los Medanos area by raptors, studying the impact of human activity on the birds and developing a management plan to lessen that impact.

Teaching

A contract with similar provisions — and teacher salaries as high as $64,000 — takes effect this fall in Dade County, Fla., which includes Miami, and administrators this summer report getting as many as eight applications for each opening.

"The new thinking is getting teachers more involved in the decision-making in the school," said Pat Crawford, a spokeswoman for Pittsburgh's public schools where "instructional cabinets" of teachers and administrators can shape teaching techniques for individual students.

Minnesota has given most students the right to attend any school districts they wish. Advanced high school students can even take courses at public colleges at the state's expense.

In Moses Lake, one of several Washington school districts being freed to tailor education programs with less bureaucratic interference, teacher lounges are suddenly alive with talk about how to use this new freedom to help the district's low-income children who aren't achieving.

Nuclear

national security and, perhaps that may override any obligation toward public accountability," Will Callicott, a spokesman for the Department of Energy, said Tuesday.

Since taking office in 1985, said Callicott, Energy Secretary John Herrington "has given heightened attention to the area of environmental safety and health," for the first time placing these issues in the hands of an assistant secretary.

E.I. du Pont Nemours & Co. runs the Savannah River facility under contract for the energy department. The plant, which has five reactors, produces plutonium and tritium, which are used in making nuclear weapons.

According to a 1985 memorandum, 30 "reactor incidents of the greatest significance" occurred there and were not disclosed to the public.

One of the most serious was the melting in November 1970 of a rod used to start an atomic chain reaction, causing radioactive contamination of an adjacent room. It took 900 people three months to clean up the contamination, according to the memo, which does not specify whether radioactivity escaped from the facility.

Energy Department officials said on Friday that they had not been informed of the incidents, but on Monday senior department spokesman C. Anson Franklin said those statements were incorrect and that the incidents had been reported to the department's regional office in Aiken.

He said that the information apparently had not been relayed to headquarters from the regional office.

The reactors at Savannah River were closed after the most recent incident, in August, and had been scheduled to reopen on Tuesday. But Energy Department officials assured members of Congress last week that production would not resume until safety was assured, possibly after 30 to 45 days.

"If they restart those things without having briefed us and without having convinced us they have solved the safety and health issues, they will be in serious trouble in the Congress," said Rep. Mike Synar, D-S.C.

Synar, chairman of the Energy, Environment and Natural Resources subcommittee of the Government Affairs Committee, held hearings on the Savannah River facility last Friday.

He reacted angrily Tuesday to assertions that national security considerations ever justified keeping mishaps secret at Savannah River.

"Just because they claim it is national security doesn't make it national security," he said. "I didn't know that the health and safety of the workers and the surrounding citizens was a national security issue."

Synar challenged assertions that Herington had improved the Energy Department's system.

"They have set up a system that rewards managers in the field for keeping the lid on bad news," said Synar.

Cultural History currently being constructed near Janss Steps. The first floor of the building is intended to house four academic programs in archaeology and world arts and cultures; the second and third floors would house the museum.

$740,000 would be used to pay for the working drawings (the last step before construction) to renovate Boelter Hall and Engineering Building I. During renovation the engineering department would be moved into the new engineering building currently under construction next to Boelter Hall, Rose said.

Rose said that if the bond issue is approved by the voters, the UC, CSU and Community College Campuses would receive allotted funds in early 1989. UCLA construction projects would be completed in early 1991, he estimated.

Quake

big quakes occur on the fault, but believe a magnitude 7 is possible.

"There is no evidence this earthquake will occur in the near future," Ziony said. "We're providing this scenario as a worst case for the LA Basin so that officials can develop the best possible emergency response plans."

At UCLA, Aroni said, officials have developed a comprehensive plan for upgrading buildings and dealing with the aftermath of a major quake. However, funding for many renovation efforts must await state approval. "That takes a long time," Aroni said. "So we're trying to get the legislature to put a new bond before the voters."

A 1985 report by Aroni's committee highlights the need for improvements on campus. The report estimates that up to 2,000 people would be killed by a major quake here during the normal work day, and at least 100 during the night or early morning hours. In addition, 10 buildings including Royce Hall, Kerckhoff Hall and Powell Library are cited as serious earthquake hazards.

Tuesday's report predicts that one-third of the 43,000 hospital beds in Los Angeles and Orange counties would be unusable after the quake.

It doesn't estimate casualties, but cites a 1981 federal study indicating a magnitude-7.5 quake could kill up to 21,000 people, hospitalize up to 84,000 and injure another 630,000 less severely.

Shaking capable of damaging ordinary buildings and partly collapsing brick structures would occur on loose sediments throughout the basin, east to Monrovia, north as far as San Fernando and south to San Juan Capistrano, said the report written by senior seismologist Tousson Toppozada and others.

San Fernando and San Juan Capistrano are about 80 air miles apart.

In three areas, shaking might be strong enough to open cracks in the ground, destroy most masonry buildings and severely damage well-built wooden structures, the report said.

Those areas are the Los Angeles-Long Beach Harbor area — where ground may turn to quicksand — the 1.25-mile-wide fault zone itself, and landslide-prone areas of the Santa Monica Mountains and Palos Verdes Hills.

Prop. 79

ed to a backlog of school building projects before voters even got to the polls.

If voters pass Proposition 79 on Nov. 8 and authorize the state to sell the general obligation bonds, at least $580 million would be used for new school construction and up to $100 million would go for renovations.

Another $50 million could be used to clean up asbestos, a cancer-causing mineral once widely used in insulation. Up to $20 million would be earmarked for air conditioners and insulation to help students at year-round school weather the summer heat.

The bonds would be paid off over 20 years from the state's general fund. An estimated 7.5 percent interest rate would add about $630 million in interest to the state's cost.

School districts must contribute matching funds to qualify for the bond money. Local contributions generally come from local bond measures and developer fees.

"Local school communities are doing their part to pay for new classrooms but cannot possibly meet the need alone," said a ballot pamphlet argument signed by Gov. George Deukmejian, state schools chief Bill Honig and Sen. Marian Bergeson, R-Newport Beach.

Proposition 79 is part of a record $3.3 billion bond package on the November ballot. In June, voters approved $2.2 billion in bonds for school, park, Cal-Vet home loans and earthquake rehabilitation.

"Five months ago we charged $2 billion worth of purchases," said Roger Magyar, author of a ballot pamphlet argument against Proposition 79. "Did the bank place a limit on our credit card, or can we just go on imitating the carefree spenders in Washington, D.C."

A recent legislative analysis said California is well below other states' average on the amount of its budget spent on debt service.

Soviet

Solzhenitsyn lives in the town of Cavendish, Vermont, where he is writing a multiple-volume history of the Russian revolution. He has been mentioned favorably in the Soviet press several times in recent months, and the journal Novy Mir says it is negotiating for the author's permission to print his novel "Cancer Ward."

Solzhenitsyn's "One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich," about the life of a prisoner, was a sensation in the Soviet Union when it was published under Nikita S. Khrushchev in 1962. But subsequent books like "Cancer Ward," "The First Circle," and "August 1914," have not been published in the Soviet Union.

The request is the first act of a new commission formed by the union to protect people who are exercising their "professional rights and personal freedoms" under Gorbachev's policy of glasnost, or greater openness, Vaksberg said.

One hundred leaders of the film industry who sit on the commission decided the first step should be reconsideration of the status of a man who "had a huge role," in exposing the horrors of the Stalin era, he said.

Vakserg is also a member of a similar commission at the more conservative Writers Union, but he said he did not know whether that union also would get involved in Solzhenitzyn's case.

The Writers Union expelled Solzhenitsyn in 1969 for "anti-social" activities. Two years earlier, the Communist Party newspaper Pravda called him "a psychically abnormal person, a schizophrenic," for his condemnation of the civil rights record of his country.

Solzhenitsyn won the Nobel Prize in Literature in 1970.

Vaksberg also said the journal Literaturny Kirgizistan planned to publish a chapter of "Gulag Archipelago." A spokesman for the journal, published in Russian in Frunze, the capital of the Central Asian republic of Kirgizia, said Tuesday it was considering publishing one to three chapters of the book for its 45,000 readers.

But the editor, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said he had not yet requested copyright permission from Solzhenitsyn.

the justices. He said that reviewing cases involving "all kinds of things I would wish people didn't do to innocent victims, it does wear you down."

He denied that civil cases have become casualties of the attempt to clear up the death penalty backlog. "We have not abandoned the civil law," Lucas said, adding that the court will soon have seven new staff attorneys to work on civil cases.

Some critics contend a plan for the state Supreme Court to issue opinions in cases within 90 days after oral argument or post-argument briefing will make oral argument almost meaningless and put enormous pressure on justices working on concurring or dissenting opinions.

But Lucas said the plan, which will take effect Jan. 1, is part of a package of steps to deal more efficiently with the appeals generated by approximately 19 million new legal filings a year in California, while preserving high legal standards.

Why General Electric Products Are No Longer Sold in the Students' Store

Next time you buy a lightbulb or a rechargeable battery in the Students' Store, you may notice a difference: there are no GE products for sale. The omission is deliberate.

After considering petitions from the campus community, ASUCLA's Board of Control has decided that GE just doesn't measure up to the ethical standards we expect from the companies we do business with. We're concerned because GE has failed to sever all its ties to apartheid South Africa. And we're uncomfortable with the knowledge that GE is near the top of the list of companies the Environmental Protection Agency has targeted for clean-up of toxic waste dump sites.

The Board of Control notified GE in June of these and other allegations against the company. GE made a blanket disclaimer, but chose not to respond to any of the specific charges. So we decided to impose sanctions — specifically, removing GE products from our shelves, and, as much as possible, from use within ASUCLA facilities. We hope this action will bring our concerns before GE in a more forceful manner, and lead to constructive dialog with the company.

ASUCLA has always been involved with social causes. In October 1987 we recognized the importance of such concerns by formally adopting an Ethical and Social Responsibility Policy. We feel that GE is in violation of that policy. That's why we removed GE products from our shelves and donated our inventory to charity.

If you would like more information about the Ethical and Social Responsibility Policy, or about the actions the Board of Control has taken regarding General Electric, please contact the office of the ASUCLA Executive Director, 332 Kerckhoff Hall, 213/825-8011.

Taking up residence in a Toyota two-door

Whitney Woodward

Two years ago this week I was living out of my car. Although I did not sleep, eat and entertain in my Toyota, all of my clothes and worldly possessions were crammed into the trunk and the back seat and the feeling of homelessness was the same.

That was a traumatic time for me. I had just transferred from a smaller school to the south (a UC neighbor whose only distinction is an anteater mascot) and the apartment I was supposed to move into wasn't finished yet. I distinctly remember walking around campus in a daze with carpet-creases in my face from sleeping on people's floors . . . making a bad impression.

One time I went to see a professor about a paper I was supposed to write, and I burst out into tears because I'd just called my manager for the sixteenth time in a week, and she told me that the building inspectors still hadn't come to look at the building. My English professor, who was a very gentle but none-the-less intimidating man, did not show the most compassion.

"You say they're still doing inspections?" he said. "Well, my dear, you won't be in until Christmas!"

Fortunately I had people I could stay with. I rotated through my various future roommates (who happened to be waiting out this interminable period from the the cushy comforts of their parents' homes) and a friend of my sisters. There was, however, one horrible night when I came back from school rather late, only to find that none of my sleeping options were available — no one seemed to be home anywhere. It was the ultimate irony that I ended up in a movie theater watching "A Room with a View" for lack of anything better to do. By this time any kind of a room would've been fine.

Another time I went to a party with some people I had just met, only to have the person who drove us disappear for the entire night. My car keys — the keys to my sanity — were in her car. I didn't know where she lived and I could only guess at her last name.

I ended up getting a ride back to my sister's friend's house, who in the morning loaned me some clothes and bus fare.

Because my car was parked in a parking structure and I didn't have keys, I bought a new parking sticker for the day and optimistically put it on the outside of my windshield (from where it was promptly stolen and I got a ticket anyway). Somehow, after a series of intricate phone calls that took all my quarters, I managed to get my keys back.

Three weeks into school, midterms started rolling around and I had a ferocious cold from walking through campus on the edge of tears all of the time. I thought it might be a good thing to to try a hotel for a couple of days. That lasted about one night. Not only were the inhabitants on either side of my room extremely active, but in the wee hours of the morning some drunken person took to pounding on my door, looking for his friend.

"Darrin, Darrin! Open the door or I'm going to kill you!" I think were his exact words.

After calling the manager for instant removal of this maniac, I spent the rest of the night crouched behind my bed. I didn't get a whole lot of studying done, to say the least.

Apart from my living arrangements, UCLA itself took some adjusting to. Parking, for example. Having to run and move my mobile home every two hours. The computer class registration system, which I had never encountered before. And the mobs and mobs of people, lines everywhere. When I came out of my classrooms or wanted to eat there was nowhere to sit. Sometimes I would seek refuge in a phone booth for a few

Some advice for Bush and Dukakis

By Nathaniel Hellerstein

November 8 approaches, and this election promises to be a hard-fought campaign. Alas, such campaigns often concentrate on irrelevant personal questions. Both parties should remember that elections are about the nation's moods, not the candidate's.

That said, I think the two personality issues are worth discussing — namely, "wimphood" and "liberalism."

Starting with wimphood.

Mr. Bush, I sympathize. I am sensitive to your feelings. Is there no way to prove your manhood? Surely your record as a World War II fighter pilot should be enough!

I think your problem comes from your record as CIA chief. We put up with spies and a secret police because the federal government says they're necessary for national security, but we do so with a bad conscience. It's as if the founding fathers were looking over our shoulders, shouting dire warnings about dangers to liberty from unelected officials with unchecked powers.

We know, in our hearts, that national security is the worst enemy of individual liberty, but who has the courage to admit this? So we conform, we pay our war taxes, and we project our cowardice on to the spies we paid for. A sad spectacle!

Alas, there's nothing you personally can do about this, short of dismantling the national security state. Anything less than that just wouldn't work. In particular, if you do get elected, please don't bother to invade some tiny Third World country just to prove your non-wimphood. Only Reagan could get away with that.

Don't worry about the wimp factor. So what if you're a wimp? It's a meaningless smear. By '80s standards, any American male is a wimp if he has more brains than Rambo, more soul than Falwell and more integrity than Meese. So why fight it? There are lots of wimps out there. Just think of the wimp vote! Even wimps deserve political representation.

What the media means by "wimp", is that you'd be a "weak president," whatever that means. But maybe America wants a "weak president" right now. We've had a "strong president" for eight years; behold the result.

Now for the dreaded L-word.

Liberalism! Liberalism! Liberalism! Mr. Dukakis, what has this country come to? The philosophy of the founding fathers is now a political liability!

The problem is that the labels have gotten reversed. During the '60s and '70s "liberalism" became synonymous with support for a huge military technocracy. And during the '80s "conservatism" came to mean spending money as if there will be no tomorrow. (Indeed, the loudest "conservative" faction believes that there won't.)

All this is the result, I believe, of America's "superpower" status. August 6 and 9 of 1945 were dark days for America. They are days that will live in infamy; when we won the war we lost the peace.

Any "superpower" is a menace to all mankind. To be a "superpower" means to threaten mankind's past, present and future.

No "superpower" can exert its full strength; to do so would destroy the world. A strength withheld eventually atrophies, so being a "superpower" means going to waste. To be a "superpower" is to be condemned to either sudden death or slow decay. "Superpower" status makes a nation super-powerless.

Mr. Dukakis, I hope and pray that the American people shall soon find the political will to renounce the accursed Bomb and all that it stands for. The desire is out there; the people are sick of national security; we want our individual liberties back.

Catch the wave, gentlemen. Any American who renounces the Bomb shall go down in history as a true liberal (i.e. a liberator of the people) and also as a true conservative (i.e. a conserver of the earth).

But what politician nowadays has that much vision? That much courage? Do either of you two gentlemen? I wonder.

So much for personalities. Now for issues.

Starting with Star Wars.

What a boondoggle! What a brilliant scam! Just think of it, gentlemen; trillions of dollars for space lasers and smart rocks, to be used only in the event of Armageddon!

And if the world doesn't end? Then all that high-priced high-tech stuff just sits there, unused, unstable and untested. And if it isn't tested? Then you can never be sure if it will work.

In other words, you would still be insecure! What better way to insure continued funding for national security?

Of course, all those trillions would have to come from somewhere; presumably from powerless groups like women, children, minorities, the aged, the homeless, the sick and the poor. Next to go would be domestic budget items like roads, trains, planes, schools, homes, cities, farms, wilderness, pure water and clean air. After building a Star Wars system, America would look like a bomb had hit it.

Such is national security!

Next, the issue of poverty.

UCLA: Uncertain beginnings

minutes to catch my breath and get some privacy!

I felt like I had never seen so many people my age in my life, even though it seemed as if I somehow had known all of them before. (Freshmen may be going through that right now . . . it's a weird feeling to expect to see familiar faces somewhere in the crowd of strangers, running up to someone only to find that they're someone else). And it was frustrating to think that I would never get to know everyone. Unlike my smaller school where you smiled and said "Hi" to every person you passed, UCLA students seemed to be rather distant, walking to their classes oblivious to everyone else. People can go years without seeing each other on campus.

My sad tale of transferring may sound like a personal sob story, but it is by no means unique. Most people don't have to wait five weeks into the quarter to sleep on a bed, but changing schools can be a bewildering experience. Although some people can slip into a new school quite easily, I've talked to others who have had it tougher.

Just remember this next time you walk up Bruin Walk and see someone frantically trying to find their way around. Don't close yourself off from meeting new people. While you may have several years worth of friends and experience at UCLA, there are lots and lots of new kids on the block. ■

Woodward, a senior majoring in English, is a Bruin staff writer.

Letters

Don't exaggerate UCLA achievements

Editor:

According to a front page article in the Oct. 3 Bruin, "as a country, UCLA finished eleventh in total medals, and with 16 golds, UCLA accounted for almost half of the gold medals (36) won by the United States." By contrast, a box on page 52 lists the medals won by UCLA athletes. This list shows UCLA people with 6 gold medals in individual events, and 10 gold medals in 6 different team and relay events. "As a country," therefore, UCLA won 6 goal medals outright, and shared 10 gold medals with perhaps 20 or more athletes on the relay and volleyball teams.

The performance of past and present UCLA students in the 1988 Olympics was outstanding; it is only demeaned by the Bruin's careless puffery.

By the way, the issue was published on Monday, October 3 — not "Thursday, Sept. 1," as printed on the Bruin masthead.

ADVICE: How to get elected in 1988

Poverty does not go away, no matter how much you punish the poor for being poor. Poverty is at our doorstep, and it is useless to blame the victim.

Reagan's Administration has done everything in its power to split American society into rich and poor. The key to success in the Reagan era has been to do useless things, such as building death machines, or selling death machines, or selling the hereafter, or speculating in stock, or scheming in boardrooms, or posturing before cameras — anything but actually working for a living. This is called individualism, but somehow it benefits corporations more than individuals.

Reagan's Administration argued against big government and has been itself an argument against big government. Don't trust government too much, it was taught us; for who knows who might get in control?

Yet I also feel that, for the very same reason, government is still important. Reagan's Administration seemed to give the impression that government is not important.

It is. There are some things that the state must do if the people are to remain free, and one of them is to keep the market from taking over. Both state and market can become tyrants, so it is best for the people if the two keep each other in check. Reagan ignored this, as he did so much else.

Now for taxes and spending.

Ronald Reagan will leave behind many terrible legacies; one of the worst will be his amazing fiscal irresponsibility. Keynesian pump-priming is one thing, but refusing to pay one's bills is quite another. It's bad enough that he will leave us a trillion dollars in the hole, but worse is the political cowardice he has sanctioned. Taxes must go up, spending must go down; everybody knows this. Stop pretending! To Mr. Bush in particular I say the following. Read my lips:

There's no such thing as a free lunch.

What to cut? You can't cut domestic programs any more; they're down to the bone already, and the destructive social effects of such stinginess have become a scandal. The most pampered, underproductive, wasteful, corrupt and politically vulnerable sector of the federal budget is the military. The Pentagon is sitting there like a plump, well-baked turkey; so get your knives out, gentlemen, and go to it.

And who to tax? It's pointless to tax the poor, and there's not much left of the middle class nowadays.

So soak the rich. Who else?

Hellerstein is a resident of Oakland.

The NORTH POLL

THE NORTH POLL is a listing of UCLA events in which student work is showcased in the areas of Theater, Film, Art, Music and Dance. Unless otherwise indicated, tickets to all listed events may be obtained through the Macgowan Hall Ticket Office, 825-2581.

By Emmett Loverde

QUESTION: Why a "North Poll"? Why student work? Why Stop Making Sense?

ANSWER: There's too much worthwhile stuff going on at this University to not be informed about it, Fans. THE NORTH POLL cases that neck of the woods because the centers for studies of the arts are in that portion of the campus. Student work is the column's main focus because the students are usually the ones who haven't the budget to promote themselves. Here you'll be able to find out about amazing new plays, concerts and gallery showings by individuals who will become tomorrow's great artists. Actually, they already are great artists, it's just that no one will know about it until tomorrow.

QUESTION: How much does this stuff cost?

ANSWER: Not much at all. Many of the productions and exhibitions are free, some carry admissions from twenty-five cents up to a dollar, but rare is the event with a ticket price higher than three dollars.

QUESTION: How good are these shows? Are they what you could bring a raging date to, or is the excitement level about right for my grandmother?

ANSWER: These shows are often excellent — they mean everything to the people performing and creating them. The quality level will vary with many factors, including the preparation time taken up by the project, its budget, and often (but not always) its ticket price. I know your date will be impressed by whatever you take them to on campus, and I wouldn't be surprised if you scored valuable points with them in the personality category.

QUESTION: Isn't it a pain in the wazoo to get tickets for these thingys?

ANSWER: Get off your duff and get on the horn! The Macgowan Hall Ticket Office will take your order over the phone and either bill you for your purchases by mail or else they'll leave the tickets for you to pick up and pay for at the Box Office — either way, you'll barely need to lift a finger, and often they will be able to tell you where you'll be sitting for whatever performance you choose. The Central Ticket Office (CTO) Trailer (located on Westwood Plaza across from the Police Station) has similar capabilities, and they accept VISA and Mastercard. I'm sorry to say that all too few productions sell out prior to performance night, but that does make the chances of getting in to see a show on any given night very good.

QUESTION: Okay, so I'm sold. But what's going on?

ANSWER: Things are starting up already. Today in the Schoenberg Auditorium, the Music Department opens the year with the first of its series of NOON CONCERTS. Today's program features ROBERTO MARTINEZ on the flute and

August Wilson's 'Fences' blocks audience from enjoyment

By William Quinn
Senior Staff Writer

■ THEATER: Fences. By August Wilson. Directed by Lloyd Richards. With James Earl Jones, Courtney B. Vance, Lynne Thigpen, Ray Aranha, Robert Gossett, Gilbert Lewis and Daphne Lyn Jones. Set by James D. Sandefur. At the UCLA James A. Doolittle Theater through Dec. 4, 1615 N. Vine Street. $22.50-37.50 (no discounts yet announced). (213)462-6666.

Fences. Aaargh.

We saw it last Thursday. We were not swept away. That's the horrible truth.

A provincial critic is thus faced with a terrifying problem: the play has been more highly honored by critics and awards committees than any other in recent memory — the Pulitzer, the New York Drama Critics', three Tonys, unqualified raves even in the local Press. An unavoidable conclusion is that there must be something wrong with the response here, which was less than rapturous.

Yet I was not alone. Straggling out of the theater on Fences's second night, the rest of the audience was somehow as subdued as we were — and it seemed not from the intrinsic tragedy in the drama, but more a deflation of expectations due to perversity of playwright manipulation — to deliberately refuse us, not just the characters, some chance of happiness.

(Actually, the local critics seemed to be likewise as troubled as I — if you paid attention to the fine print. In reviews in the Times and the Examiner, both critics noted that something was wrong in the second act. They blamed it on Courtney B. Vance, the son, saying he was too method-y. I found him delightful and his transition from uncertain, gangly but very masculine teen to stiff, proud, U.S. Marine enlisted man superb).

Yet there was a sense of misfired performances on stage last Thursday, as if the cast had exhausted their inspiration and energy for the week on the previous night's gala premier.

Courtney B. Vance and James Earl Jones in 'Fences.'

The second act's climactic fistfight between lead character and son was also marred by a wan physicality as if star James Earl Jones had thrown out his back and needed to watch his sacroiliac.

As everyone has heard, Jones won a Tony for playing Troy Maxson, a Chicago garbageman approaching 60. Set in the mid-1950s, the conflicts facing him are at least four: racial conflict at his job, trouble with his teenage son, cheating on his wife, financially taking advantage of his brain-damaged brother. Each and every situation ends badly, in disappointment. Yet this is arbitrary tragedy, not classic tragedy where the hero's fatal flaw causes his downfall. August Wilson's subtext is strongly that society forced Maxson into each venality in spite of some supposed human nobility he should have been born to. The playwright's intention seems to be that racist America should condemn itself, not Troy Maxson. In no way does Maxson triumph over his adversities.

I am left with the feeling that in spite of dramatic convention (always necessary to upend for furthering the art), common sense and psychological research, Wilson methodically chose the bleakest outcomes to exploit an audience's liberal guilt.

I had been warned that the first act might plod but the searing explosiveness of the second act would more than reward patience during the first. Experience was astoundingly the complete opposite. The first act could not have been more wonderful (given that Eugene O'Neill is deceased). Warm, rich, complex, with language at once truthfully observed and original, we witnessed the state of the art, the world-class top-of-the line. Most of the joy — and there was much laughter — derived from Jones/Maxson repeating, obviously with embellishment at every retelling, the saga of his life.

We learned right away that he was under a cloud at work for challenging Whites-only drive-rule and Blacks carry the trash.

Big Band, Bebop 'Jazz at Wadsworth'
Bill Holman opens series' fifth season

By Gregory Keer
Contributor

■ CONCERT: Bill Holman Band. Part of the 'Jazz at the Wadsworth' series. Presented by UCLA Student Committee for the Arts. At Wadsworth Theater, Oct. 2, 1988. Call (213) 825-9261 for more information.

Over a thousand music fans celebrated the 50th installment of the Jazz at the Wadsworth series with the Bill Holman Band last Sunday at the Wilshire Blvd. theater. The concert opened the fifth season of the series which has been bringing some of L.A.'s finest jazz musicians free of charge to the public.

Sunday night's main event, the Bill Holman Band, provided two hours of big band jazz to a crowd ranging in age from about 18 to 75. Holman, a former mechanical engineering student at UCLA back in the late-'40s, has made six albums during his career, the latest being The Bill Holman Band on JVC Records. He has performed with such artists as Stan Kenton, Shelley Manne, and Mel Lewis and written for jazz luminaries like Count Basie, Woody Herman, Carmen McCrae, Joe Williams and Sarah Vaughan. Just last year, he won his first Grammy award (he's had five nominations in all) for his arrangement of "Take The A-Train" for Doc Severinsen and The Tonite Show Band.

During the first hour of the show, which began at 7:00 p.m., the white-bearded bandleader guided a group of polished musicians through his own songs, like "Frontrunner" and "Lightnin." Highlights from this half included the band's covers of the Thelonious Monk tunes "Rhythm-a-ning," sporting Holman's faithful bebop arrangement, and "I Mean You," which featured a marvelously arranged soprano saxophone section where soloists Lanny Morgan and Bobby Miletello shined brightest.

Other standout pieces from the initial fifty minutes or so were the versions of Billy Strayhorn's (Duke Ellington's chief songwriter) classic "Raincheck" and the crowd-pleasing "Come Rain Or Come Shine," a song spotlighting Steve Hofsteader's

Smithereens pulverize Palladium

By Tom Huang

■ CONCERT: The Smithereens and Dramarama at the Hollywood Palladium, October 1st, 1988.

To put on a good performance as a small and upcoming band, you have to be good. To put on a great performance as a small and upcoming band riding on only two albums in front of a relatively small crowd (such as the one in the Palladium), you have to be great.

The Smithereens were great.

With lead vocalist Pat DiNizio directing the young, rowdy high school mod/anarchist crowd, the Smithereens rocked the Hollywood Palladium into the night, putting on a performance of high energy and great funertainment. All through the night, DiNizio, sporting a goatee and glasses, and the band (guitarist Jim Babjak, bassist Mike Mesaros, and drummer Dennis Diken) played with the crowd, allowed them to sing in for them during songs, gave high fives, played little acoustic vignettes in between sets (James Bond theme, Batman theme), and even had guitarist Jim Babjak and drummer Dennis Diken and lead singer Pat DiNizio switch places for a set, with Diken singing a Michael Jackson/Ozzy Ozzbourne medley. Just great fun.

DiNizio, who is also a guitarist, opened up by jumping right into their latest single release "Drown In My Own Tears," sending the general-admission audience dancing to the driving beat and guitar of the song. DiNizio sang and expressed himself with pleading emotion that gave each song its own personality. During guitar/bass

Lorries' 'brutal, hypnotic' sound

Records

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

■ ALBUM: Nothing Wrong. Red Lorry Yellow Lorry. On RCA/Beggar's Banquet Records.

"Brutal and Hypnotic."

Vocalist/guitarist Chris Reed once described his band Red Lorry Yellow Lorry with these two chilling words. And he couldn't have selected a more precise definition.

The Lorries are one of those rare gems with a mind of its own. There's no conventional sound here, no compromising to today's trends. It's just the Lorries pounding a bit of their unrestrained audio nightmares into the innocence of today's musical airwaves (Yes, today's airwaves are innocent!).

Mind you, there's nothing wrong with a little fun and games in a song. But if that's all one's looking for, this band isn't the one to turn to for salvation. Listening to a record by the Lorries is like asking for audio whiplash.

I suppose the Lorries would serve the masochistic types best. However, a hint of instrumental brutality doesn't necessarily make this British trio the thrash band of the '80s.

The Lorries defy any such definition. And with such uncompromising, they've managed to create Primitives create upbeat 'Lovely'

By Rob Winfield
Contributor

■ ALBUM: Lovely. The Primitives. On RCA Records.

Remember when music was music, art was art, and the only thing that really mattered in a song was having a good time?

Well, I'd like to introduce you to the Primitives, the '80s answer to bubblegum pop.

However, the Primitives aren't the typical ditzoid band, a la Tiffany, Debbie Gibson, or even one of my personal favs Fuzzbox. This is bubblegum pop with intelligence — sort of like the Ramones meets the Go-Go's (the Go-Go's did have it for a while).

And their debut album Lovely may just become the year's most upbeat, feel-good collection of songs to shake off that soon-to-be winter chill.

There's no politics, no false expectations, no conflicts, no complaints — just the Primitives showering the world with happy tunes of love and life. But don't assume these perky popsters are pushovers.

There's a certain degree of ferocity in their music which hasn't arisen since the dawn of the Ramones. Remember Joey Ramone howling "Sheena's a Punk Rocker" and "Rock and Roll High School"?

Those days are finally back. And instead of

'Bebop and Bird' lacks direction, focus

By Tony Tran
Arts & Entertainment Editor

■ ALBUM: Charlie Parker: Bebop & Bird. On Stage and in the Studio 1946-1952, Volumes I and II. Rhino Records.

The buzz surrounding the new movie about Charlie Parker, Bird (directed by Clint Eastwood), makes it irresistible to go out and get your hands on a recording by the great jazz artist.

If you do, stay away from this embarrassment from Rhino Records. Lacking focus and direction, Bebop and Bird does ill justice to Parker — one of the greatest jazz pioneers in jazz history, and the leader of the bebop revolution which assured jazz's artistic longevity.

From just looking at the array of songs and personnel on the label of this new two-volume collection of Parker's studio and live works, one is driven to have great expectations. The list of Parker's sidemen represented here is top-notch, including Bud Powell (piano), Art Blakey and Max Roach (drums), and Miles Davis (trumpet) — as are the tunes, from "'Round Midnight" and "Lester Leaps in" to "Relaxin' at Camarillo" and "Ornithology."

The anticipation fades, though, when you start listening to this slipshod, sprawling, meandering disappointment. First of all, it has the most confusing liner notes I have ever come across on a recording. The titles don't match the pieces you hear. Trying to follow the notes as you listen to the music is a Kafkaesque task. Don't even think about trying to trace the development of Parker's sound on this record.

The performances are hopelessly fragmented and destroyed: studio out-takes, live performances, and sound checks are mixed together without any logical, consistent, or insightful sequence.

Parker's beautiful, swooping saxophone solos are often mercilessly cut off, or started in mid-flight.

I'm all the more astounded at the inferior quality of this record, considering Rhino Records' generally excellent knack at assembling collections of music from the past (especially in the areas of early rock 'n' roll and blues music). Bebop and Bird is indeed a debacle for the keeper of America's musical treasure.

Perhaps an excuse is inexperience. This collection is the first of Rhino's Hipsville jazz offshoot. Well, things can only look up from here.

It is a credit to Parker's transcendent genius that even when his music is as mangled and corrupted as on this sorry collection, his flashes of brilliance still shine through.

The man deserved better than this.

Father-son confrontation in 'Fences.'

'Fences'

We met the family that nourishes him in his adversity and brought him back from the edges of society from being sentenced at 19 to 15 years for armed robbery. Responses from the other characters — best friend, loving wife, elder son, befuddled and crazy brother — wove to create an instant sense of family.

As an example, when Maxson relives his courtship of Rose, actress Lynne Thigpen) gives her retort to his wooing gambit, "I ain't the marryin' kind."

"I told him . . . to move out'n the way so the marryin' kind could find me. Nigger, you blocking the view!" We saw that she takes care of him beautifully and he is profoundly appreciative; she is tough enough to stand up to him; and their physical relationship after 18 years is still dynamite.

Then the "sports angle" (which I have always thought gimmicky, though for a long while, writing, acting and directing make it acceptable) takes over for a long stretch. Maxson had been a sensational, if overage baseball player, who believes the segregation in professional sports — not his being 40 at the time as his wife reminds him — destroyed his chances to become rich and famous and consigned him to the garbage cans.

When his second son wants to abandon his bagging job at the local supermarket to play high school football, and a college scout wants to give him a scholarship, Maxson flatly (and, for the first time with dramatic illogic) refuses to cut the kid some slack and let him do it.

The act ends with another conflict — did Maxson unethically co-opt his war-damaged brother's government settlement to buy the Maxson house and defraud him? The play's intention as we left for intermission seemed to be to resolve these conflicts in some satisfying way — for us as well as the characters.

It was not to be, and story-wise, from the second act curtain's rise, it was downhill to a trough of defeat where son Corey's Marine uniform, Rose's embrace of the Church and her raising and loving Troy's bastard daughter will be the small and realistic consolations. Maxson had been promoted as a token Black to garbage-truck driver, but turned out to hate it. Then he had died in the middle of the second act and the final curtain stretched ahead with no hope in sight for his redemption.

Rose did not stand up for Corey. He did not go to college at all. Father and son were never reconciled. Happier playwright choices would have been, admittedly, selling out the drama as mellow flugelhorn.

Following a ten-minute break, during which conversations touched on the theatre's superb acoustics and the non-existent price of admission, KKGO jazz radio announcer Chuck Niles announced the start of the second set. Since the Wadsworth series kicked off in 1984, KKGO has been broadcasting the 8:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. hour live via satellite to the entire nation, heard locally on 105.5 FM.

Holman guided his 17-piece ensemble through an even more inspired hour of traditional big band and bebop music, beginning with the conductor's hard-swinging originals "No Joy In Mudville," and "The Primrose Path," the latter showing off the exciting tenor veteran saxman Bob Cooper.

The concert dragged a little over the next couple of songs as the arrangements lacked any real distinction from some of the earlier exercises, but everything picked up again with the band's performances of two of bebop's most celebrated compositions, Sonny Rollins' "St. Thomas" and Jimmy Rowles' "The Peacocks," during which baritone saxist Bob Efferts took center stage.

Holman's troupe hit its highest point when they delivered a soaring run-through of Charlie Parker's immortal "Just Friends," a timely piece which received an enthusiastic response from the crowd. Near the song's finish, KKGO host Chuck Niles announced the end of the broadcast.

But as a final audience pleaser, Holman picked up his own instrument, a tenor sax, and blew a brief version of Stevie Wonder's "Isn't She Lovely" until Chuck Niles gave the band a friendly hook that abruptly closed the show. Judging by the fans' vocal disappointment at the concert's sudden cut-off, the evening was a success for both the Bill Holman Band and the curtain-raiser for the new series of free performances at the Wadsworth Theater.

The Jazz At The Wadsworth series is produced by the Student Committee for the Arts at UCLA and the UCLA Center for the Performing Arts. Supporters for the concerts include KKGO-FM, the National Endowment For the Arts, and the American Musician's Union, Local #47. The shows are held the first Sunday of every month. Admission is free and seating in the 1450-capacity theatre is first-come, first-serve. Coming November 6 is fusion saxophonist Richard Elliot and the 60-member New American Orchestra will take the stage on December 4.

solos, he would drop off and let Babjak and Mesaros play it up, to the delight of the smashed front-row listeners. At times when all three guitarists played together, they'd move their guitars in synch while prancing on the stage.

The receptive crowd spurred them on as they moved into "Green Thoughts", their title track from the latest album, then "Groovy Tuesday," a hip swaying tune from their first album Especially For You. Throughout the concert, the Smithereens played a mix of a majority of both their albums, evoking great reception for "Blood and Roses" and their two semi-hits, "Only A Memory" and "House We Used To Live In."

During "House We Used To Live In" and "Something New," DiNizio led the audience to sing in during the chorus, getting them involved and keeping them happy; these songs were probably the best performances of the night. Among other songs presented during the show and four encores were the melodramatic numbers "Cigarette" and "Especially For You," and the driving, feet-clicking tunes "The World We Know" and "Deep Black."

In addition to their own songs, they also spilled into a cover of Led Zeppelin's "Rock and Roll," asking the audience to sing the words, and a mix of a lot of different songs with drummer Diken singing and the band just jamming to his words. At one point, he pulled an audience member off the stage to dance with him to continue the impromptu-looking encore performance.
